It can handle automatic CAPTCHA recognition, email activation before posting, account registration, and the use of proxy servers to disguise IP addresses. According to Symantec Corporation, XRumer serves as a toolkit for fishing employees who employ "slip" methods in their work. The software allows users to select popular topics easily and provides access to various spamware tools, including A-Poster and Xrumer. These tools function similarly to email spam-sending tools from previous years, such as SendSafe or DarkMailer. Xrumer focuses on forums, while A-Poster targets guestbooks. Both offer automated processes that include CAPTCHA recognition, enabling the generation of hundreds of free email accounts. Washington Post reports that XRumer 3 can evade several technologies designed to counter blogspam, including account registration and online "Turing tests."
