FIFA 14 takes the next step in the renowned sports simulation series from Electronic Arts. As a licensed game by the International Federation of Football Association (FIFA), EA Canada delivered evolutionary updates within their one-year production cycle. Players get to manage their favorite footballers competing in various match types, leveraging a massive database featuring over 15k players globally. The inclusion of prestigious clubs and live opponent features expands gameplay possibilities. Additionally, the social aspect is enhanced through integration with the EA Sports Football Club network module. Building upon previous successes, FIFA 14 introduces innovative improvements such as refined ball physics and a remodeled shooting system, allowing for more realistic and controlled gameplay experiences. These enhancements provide players with greater control over match flow, enabling them to dictate the pace of the game. Furthermore, updates include improved AI for team partners, enhanced dribbling techniques, and an expanded defensive tactics menu. bandicoot says that ios is better than android version. he writes that his s3 works perfect with ios and its much better than the android version. however, enigma24 who plays on xony xperia z1 says that if there is a black screen then buffered rendering should be enabled. it can also give a good sign that the game is running. but if you are playing on pc and the grey screen doesn't go away after some time, then press start or x to continue. the phoenix gives advice to enigma24 saying he has to wait for some time as the game takes some time to load up. it can also be fixed by pressing start or x. he also says that if there is a black screen on android then buffered rendering should be enabled. it looks similar to pc version where grey screen appears. Even with buffer rendering enabled, some phones struggle to display content properly, such as the Poco F3 and Redmi Note 6 Pro, which are paired with lower-end processors.
