Italians Sing for Soraya

SAN REMO — While Princess Soraya Esfandiary spends the days window-shopping, along Via Condotti and Via Veneto, or looking at the red roses, Prince Raimondo Orsini sends her regularly, Italian song writers are singing the blues for her.

Of 435 songs submitted to the jury of San Remo's celebrated song festival this year, two are dedicated to Soraya, whose former husband, Mohammed Reza Shah Pahlevi, ruler of Persia, is about to marry a new wife, Farah Diba. One song is "Green Eyes," a beguine, describing Soraya's walks along Rome's Via Veneto. The other is simply called "Soraya."

A Venice-Munich double-decker

A double-decker turnpike motor road bringing Munich and Venice within 380 kilometers of each other is the newest communication project now being discussed in north-eastern Italy. Austria and Germany, Engineers point out that such a road could be built in three years at a cost of about three hundred million lire per kilometre, and that it would pay for itself in short order in view of the traffic that it would bring a sea port within fairly easy reach of the great manufacturing plains of South Germany.

The road would run almost due north from Venice through Cortina and Brunico and, after tunneling the Alpine divide at the end of the Aurina valley, would link up with existing motor roads leading into Munich.

Opposition to the project comes of course from Innsbruck Trento and Verona which would be cut out from this north-south thoroughfare.

The idea of running the north-bound and south-bound lanes of the road one above the other on a kind of continuous two-deck concrete viaduct is backed by engineers in mountainous country. The viaduct can be laid up the bottom of gorges and narrow valleys on stilts built into the riverbeds and thus kept free of avalanches. Also, when the top lane is plugged by heavy snowfalls, traffic can still use the bottom covered lane.

Texas Minister Cleared in Italy

VICENZA, Italy — An American minister of the Church of Christ has been acquitted by a Vicenza court of a charge of vilifying the Roman Catholic religion.

The charge had been brought against the Rev. Howard B. Bybee, 33, of Garland, Tex., on the basis of a sermon he delivered in this north Italian city last Feb. 8. Police Commissioner Aldo Violante accused him of violating Italian law by stating in his sermon that veneration of saints' relics leads to paganism.

Criticism of Roman Catholicism — Italy's state religion — is a crime under Italian law.

The Vicenza prosecutor asked for acquittal on grounds that the sermon "did not exceed proper limits." In Italy, a prosecutor must take a case to trial if ordered by an examining magistrate but can say at the trial whether he considers the charges justified.

HIGHWAY OF SUN HAS PLENTY OF FOG

MILAN (AP) — The official name of Italy's new Milan-to-Rome superhighway is "Autostada del Sole." That means the autoway of the sun. Over last weekend on one stretch of the road near Milan there were 40 accidents caused by fog.

Joseph Santano was a friend of mind, he told me of many things of great interest. This was good for me, for I am a writer of short stories. Joseph was a quiet man, and the other tenants in the building profited because of this. They were old and needed much peaceful rest and sleep. Joseph had a way with flowers, everything he planted grew very large and beautiful. He became famous. Joe was a gardener.

In fact many claimed Joe to be the most wonderful gardener to have ever lived. The flowers Joe planted not only grew to enormous sizes, but glowed with that vibrating color that attracted folks from close and far. Joe did all his own work. He received very large sums from the richest of people for his services. Botanists and learned men tried to study the soil Joe used or his method of planting, but was unable to find anything unusual about either, so Joe's secret of growing beautiful plants was never understood, not even by himself.

Joe and I, living in a very poor neighborhood, were the subject of much gossip. It was known by one and all I was living poorly through necessity, but Joe must be worth a fortune, for they all knew of Joe's fame and fabulous sums he received for his work, but none have ever known him to part with any of his money, only for bare necessities, would he spend any.

To his employers and Botanist, Joe was a genius, to me who knew much about him, a mystery; to his neighbors who knew nothing about him, a miser, so many years passed under the existing circumstances.

We both grew old together. One day Joe came home with the most pleased look on his face I have ever seen. He spoke with a voice that was echoing with happiness. "My friend" he said, "for I know I am a man who has a friend, my time is short on this earth. The doctor says I have but a little while to live. Thank God for my life. It was devoted to Flowers and to Mankind, and they both were most responsive and devoted to me. So I'll die a man knowing I have fulfilled my mission on earth and one who has been greatly assisted by his God. Take this money and after my death see that my body reaches this address in Sicily where all preparations have been made for my burial."

Joseph Santano died, and I took his body to its burial place in South Sicily. It was buried before the largest crowd of mourners ever witnessed. Pushing my way to the tomb, I read this inscription on his Grave. "HERE LIES JOSEPH SANTANO WHO HAS BEEN GIVEN GREAT POWER OVER PLANT LIFE, SO THAT HE MAY EARN ENOUGH MONEY TO BUY EVERY POOR VILLIAGER HERE HIS OWN HOME. GOD HAS SEEN THAT HIS LOVE FOR FLOWERS HAS BEEN JUSTIFIED AND HE HAS SEEN THAT HIS NATIVE VILLIAGERS ARE HAPPY. SO WE CAN ALL BE REASSURED THAT HIS FUTURE IN THE UNKNOWN HEREFTER WILL BE A SPLENDOR ONE."

After reading this inscription, I knew the secret the Botanist will never learn. I also knew why Joseph mystified me, and last but not least, how human beings back in my own land had mistaken the most liberal man on earth for being a miser.

Without My Birth Record. Can I Prove I Am 65 Years Old?

Question: I am 65 years old and would like to apply for social security. However, I have no proof of my age, having been born in a country where the official record of my birth was destroyed during the last war. Is there any way I can prove my age?

Answer: There are several possible methods by which you may be able to establish your age for purposes of obtaining social security benefits. (1) If you still have the passport with which you entered the United States as an immigrant, it may contain your age. Such evidence is usually accepted by officials of the Social Security Administration. (2) If you have any children born in the United States, your age given on their birth certificate will ordinarily be accepted as proof of your own age. (3) In the event that you cannot furnish either of the above documents, you can probably obtain a certification as to your age at the time you first entered the United States, based on the records of the United States Immigration and Naturalization Service. To obtain such a certification, you should file application Form N-585, which can be obtained at the nearest office of the Immigration and Naturalization Service. A three dollar fee must accompany your application. The Immigration and Naturalization Service has such information for immigrants who entered the United States after June 29, 1906.
