

New Testament Courses

We Have Seen the Lord: The Resurrection in Each Gospel

This course compares the resurrection stories from all four Gospels with an eye towards how the gospel writers use the resurrection appearances of Jesus in order to create unique portraits of who Jesus is.

The Gospel of Mark: A Brief Beginning

This course examines how Mark's Gospel uses various literary techniques and themes to communicate who Jesus truly is – and, therefore, who the community who follows him should be – to the early church and to us today.

Women in the New Testament

This course introduces a more accurate historical picture of the lived experience of ancient women and why this matters for the way we read the New Testament today.

The Gospel of Luke: A New and Old Story

This course offers a close examination of the Gospel of Luke, including its major themes, unique presentation of Jesus, and re-use of Old Testament texts to frame Jesus' identity and mission.

Echoes of Scripture in the New Testament

In this course you will discover how and why the writers of the New Testament tell the story of Jesus and the early church by re-using ideas and images that come from Genesis through Malachi.

The Corinthian Correspondence: The Crisis of Church Conflict

This course explores the issues that the church in Corinth faced and the nature of the Apostle Paul's conversation with them, with a focus on how this ancient correspondence between Paul and Corinth can offer support and guidance to the church as it navigates conflict today.

Paul's Letter to the Philippians

In this four-week course, you will discover key themes in Paul's letter to the church in Philippi, including the role of suffering in the life of believers, the communal identity of Jesus-followers, the wise use of role models and examples, and the complete paradigm shift that believers undergo.

Acts of the Apostles

In this course on the Acts of the Apostles, you will explore the life of the earliest Christian communities, including how it negotiated conflict with and survival in the Greco-Roman world.

Paul's Letter to the Romans

This course offers a closer look at the book of Romans, including key topics such as freedom from sin, what real love looks like, why family is the best description of our faith, and how to use diversity to create unity.
