Questions

- Read Genesis 37-40. Here, we find the story of Tamar inserted into a longer story about Joseph.
  - Why might the biblical writers have inserted the story of Tamar and Judah in the middle of another story?
  - How does Tamar's story help us better understand the Joseph story?
- Joshua 6:22-25 tells us how the story of Rahab ends. The very next story is about a man named Achan who proves to be unfaithful.
  - What differences do you see between the Rahab and Achan?
  - What reversals do you see in the two narratives?
  - What might these side-by-side stories be demonstrating?
- Read Emily Dickinson's poem "Hope is the thing with feathers" (below).
  - What do you feel when you read this poem?
  - How does the poem describe hope?
  - Where do you find a similar feeling in the stories of Tamar and Rahab?

"Hope is the Thing With Feathers"

"Hope" is the thing with feathers -
    That perches in the soul -
And sings the tune without the words -
    And never stops - at all -

And sweetest - in the Gale - is heard -
    And sore must be the storm -
That could abash the little Bird
    That kept so many warm -

I've heard it in the chillest land -
    And on the strangest Sea -
Yet - never - in Extremity,
    It asked a crumb - of me.
