Questions

- How does remembering that 1 Corinthians was written within a relationship—not as a detached manual—invitingly shift your expectations of Scripture?
- Reflection on the “communal” aspect of Paul as an author:
  - What do you learn about God’s design for ministry when you see how Paul relied on others like Sosthenes, Timothy, and Silas?
  - How might Paul’s collaborative approach challenge modern views of leadership, authority, or “celebrity” ministry?
  - Think about the voices that shape your own faith. In what ways is the gospel in your life also a product of teamwork?
- How could shifting from “me” questions to “we” questions transform your understanding of discipleship or church life?
- How does recognizing God’s covenant with a people—rather than isolated individuals—change how we think about sin, forgiveness, or holiness?
- Of the six major ideas in this lesson, which challenges your assumptions about Paul or the Bible the most? Why?
