Case Study: Strengthening Protection with More Data Sources

For years, fraud analysts at a leading e-commerce company were forced to tab one spreadsheet to another as they manually reviewed the various components of a suspicious transaction. From device fingerprinting and customer ID information to social media activity, Fraud.net integrated all these different data sources onto a single platform—accessible on a single screen.

As a result, the e-commerce company's fraud team:

- Dramatically reduced data integration time and challenges
- Broke down data silos so they could more effectively evaluate fraud
- Reduced the average transaction review time by 50%

"Just keeping my company's data organized and easy to digest has been a huge lift for my team's productivity and business decisions. We actually uncovered a new type of fraud that our internal system wouldn't have been able to catch."
