Leadership

How well leaders and governors promote, monitor and evaluate the provision for the Catholic life and mission of the school

Loyola's Jesuit roots and its mission for 'the greater glory of God' is fully understood and lived daily by the pupils. They are able to explain the importance of the school's motto and values and link them to how they should conduct themselves. 'We are a Catholic school, praying and the school mission statement goes at the top of all our books and we do all for the greater glory of God'. Pupils feel a deep connectedness to Loyola and feel very happy and safe. This results in them flourishing. As a parent shared, 'the values and teaching are strongly interwoven through school life'. Pupils are responding to Catholic social teaching in a variety of ways, supporting the local foodbank, Cafod, Noah's Ark or the Christmas shoebox appeal, to name a few. They also respond by sharing their talents, especially through singing to enhance liturgical celebrations within school, parishes, the diocese and abroad on pilgrimage. Pupils recognise Christ in others and respect and accept each other for who they are. They are given a voice and are encouraged to develop their leadership skills. Path Lighters, the School Council and other pupils could all share the work that they do to support others within their community and for 'their global neighbours'.

The mission statement is expressed abundantly throughout the school and underpins every facet of school life. This deeply embedded mission is adopted by all staff and observed in the way they interact with each other and the relationships forged with the pupils and wider community. As one parent expressed, 'my son's teacher cares about more than just his academic work, it's a holistic approach'. Pastoral care lies at the heart of daily life at Loyola along with a warm welcome, which adds further richness to this community. The school environment is distinctly rooted in its Catholic foundations. This can be seen in the thoughtful liturgically themed displays such as the community board, the Courtesy Cup board, the careful placing of information to support emotional wellbeing and scripture quotations along with the pupil voice letterbox which promises that 'we listen'. Each classroom has appropriate prayer tables displaying correct liturgical colours. These are prominently placed alongside meaningful displays supporting the relevant religious education topic. These remind the community of their purpose and that formation and happiness are central to school life. The provision for relationships, sex and health education is very carefully met. It is planned with extreme diligence and dovetails into the holistic approach which the school takes with regard to the educational, spiritual and moral growth of its pupils.

The headteacher and deputy headteacher view Catholic life and mission as a core responsibility. They make sure that it is lived, known and spoken about all the time. The links are made explicit to all stakeholders so that everyone is very clear regarding the purpose of Loyola as a school. This is witnessed by all and becomes woven into the rhythms of the everyday life of the school. The headteacher said, 'We want the pupils to remember and keep hold of all the morals and values we teach them so that it serves them as they go through life. The pupils are the future.' Catholic life and mission are placed at the top of governor meeting agendas and headteacher reports. It is lived in the way the wellbeing and care for staff is addressed. Staff responses were extremely positive. They shared that they feel supported and appreciated. Parents were very effusive regarding the love and kindness shown daily by the headteacher and deputy headteacher and how they 'superbly lead the school' and ensure that Loyola is 'the embodiment of the Catholic faith'. Leaders and governors actively take up development opportunities provided by the diocese and willingly respond to requests to support parishes. Governors are regular visitors to the school, meeting with pupils and staff. Their challenge and support ensure that Catholic life and mission are not overlooked or diminished in any way.

Pupils at Loyola said, 'Religious education is one of our most challenging subjects in the school day'. They embrace all opportunities to deepen their religious education knowledge and expertise, enjoying the increased rigour that the new Religious Education Directory has brought. Pupils speak eloquently, knowledgeably and with increasing discernment about the various topics they have learnt about. They especially enjoy the wealth and variety of tasks they are given and the excellent teaching they receive. Their religious education books, along with their relationships, sex, and health education books and class portfolios show a vast array of work. These include freeze frames, newspaper articles, diary entries, debates and recounts as a few examples. Pupils accept the invitation to choose how they might record a piece of work and apply themselves fully. Reflecting on their learning is a strength and responses to marking demonstrate deep theological understanding across the school. Pupils make excellent progress and readily make links back to their prior learning, scripture and conversations. Bibles are readily available for scripture references, which they are very comfortable using and quoting from. Their mature religious vocabulary and practised oracy, for embedding learning, play a significant role in the quality of work produced and is evident in conversations. Pupils know exactly how well they are achieving in religious education. They fully understand marking and can self-assess.

Teachers benefit from a collegiate approach where they are fully supportive of one another. The excellent specialist teacher and deputy headteacher have a high level of expertise and demonstrate this confidently. They have developed the expertise of other staff so that pupils receive high-quality teaching within religious education. Teachers use well-planned lessons to drive learning outcomes alongside skilful questioning techniques. For example, 'How can you link the raising of Lazarus to the resurrection at Easter?' Teachers in the best lessons explain the journey the pupils will be taking in a topic. They reiterate the importance of prior learning as a foundation in the next steps to understanding and growth as a learner. Acknowledging that scripture is hard supports the pupils in their approach and encourages them to ask questions. Marking is timely and appropriate with challenging written questions as follow up. All pupils respond to marking. Lovely relationships, praise and humour all add to the teaching provision, resulting in strong progress, outcomes and the pupils being exceptionally eloquent and religiously literate. Pupils can link scripture to daily life, Catholic social teaching and school values. They share it with others. This is because staff recognise the important role religious education plays in the formation of the pupils and the importance of allowing time for reflection in lessons.

The vision for introducing the new Religious Education Directory has been systematic and thoughtful. This has ensured that staff needs have been fully taken into account so that its impact has been positive and inspirational. This approach has enabled staff to thrive and drive teaching standards and outcomes for religious education at pace. Alongside this, the governors have been kept fully informed and have attended relevant and appropriate training at the diocese and within school so that they too can fully support religious education. Governors pose relevant questions, seeking to ensure that impact is appropriate. Staff have received high-quality professional development, so that the pupils are benefiting and achieving the best possible outcomes. Trustees are kept fully informed. Religious education receives full parity with other subjects and is regarded as a core subject. All policies reflect this and high-quality resources are available and used daily. Religious education is monitored carefully and leaders respond swiftly to needs and areas of concern leading to the very pleasing and excellent outcomes Loyola secures.

How well leaders and governors promote, monitor and evaluate the provision for collective worship

Pupils show a high level of engagement in prayer and liturgy, demonstrated consistently whenever they gather, whether in class, year groups, or as a whole school community. They participate confidently through well-rehearsed responses to familiar prayers and actions, and through the strength, reverence, and enthusiasm of their singing. This is particularly evident during whole-school Masses, including confident singing in Latin. Parents share that weekly Masses leave them feeling calm and uplifted and the pupils' singing is an emotional experience. One parent shared, "The boys sang 'Dona Nobis Pacem' so beautifully I felt God was speaking." Pupils listen attentively to scripture and engage thoughtfully with its meaning, which frequently leads to actions beyond the celebration itself. They demonstrate a secure and detailed understanding of the wide range of prayer forms within the Catholic tradition. Pupils collaborate effectively with teachers, the religious education specialist, and one another to plan and prepare prayer and liturgical experiences. Designated roles such as Path Lighters and Prayer Leaders are undertaken confidently, with pupils embracing their ministries with pride and maturity. Path Lighters provide lots of opportunities for the school to join in prayer with one child sharing, 'Praying together lifts each other up and encourages us to work together for the greater glory of God'. Pupils' preparation, planning, and leadership of prayer are clearly structured and sequenced appropriately according to age. However, this is not yet consistently engaging pupils deeply and leading them to full, active and conscious prayerful participation.

Prayer and liturgy are central to the life of the school and are an integral part of daily experiences for both pupils and staff. There is a rich and extensive expression of the Catholic tradition of prayer. Scripture is carefully selected in line with the liturgical year, with clear and meaningful links made between the chosen readings, the overall theme of the celebration, and the actions pupils are encouraged to take into their daily lives. One pupil shared, 'Prayer is not just something we do; it shapes how we think and feel and inspires us to act. Through prayer, we make a positive difference in the world and for future of generations to come.' Scripture also forms the foundation for the creative and reflective prayer environments established across the school. Class prayer follows a clear and purposeful structure. This is complemented by the modelling of Visio Divina by the specialist teacher in building staff confidence in leading prayer. There is a strong commitment to creating sacred spaces within classrooms at appropriate times, in addition to those used across the school.

Leaders place the highest priority on prayer and liturgy, ensuring that pupils experience daily prayer opportunities that are rich, varied, and progressive. The school's policy for prayer and liturgy is clear, relevant, and well understood, resulting in meaningful spiritual development for all members of the community. Staff highly value the professional development and formation they have received, facilitated by senior leaders and the specialist teacher. This training is having a clear and tangible impact across the school and is particularly appreciated by teachers who are committed to making worship meaningful and inclusive. The leaders' comprehensive and wellplanned annual calendar of prayer and liturgical events allows pupils, particularly the Path Lighters, to share responsibility for its delivery. Governors are highly supportive of the school's prayer life and work closely with leaders to remain well informed about the range and quality of prayer experiences offered. During pilgrimages to Rome and Lourdes, both parish priests and parents witnessed how the pupils' deep immersion in prayer translates into genuine understanding and a lived commitment to faith in action. Together, leaders and governors reflect carefully on the impact of prayer and liturgy on pupils and use this reflection proactively to inform strategic planning. Prayer and liturgy are also prioritised within staff development, and the school actively engages with other schools and the diocese to seek inspiration and further enhance practice.
