Week 9 fantasy football trade value charts are now available, allowing managers to evaluate potential trades and make informed decisions. The charts cover standard, half-PPR (point per reception), and full PPR leagues, as well as six-points-per-passing-touchdown and superflex leagues. To use the charts effectively, it's essential to include the values of players being moved to the bench or dropped in your calculation. For example, a trade offering J.K. Dobbins, Diontae Johnson, and Cedric Tillman for CeeDee Lamb might initially seem favorable, but if you're bumping down Raheem Mostert and Keon Coleman, it's actually a net negative deal. The rankings are based on half-PPR values in 12-team leagues, with players sorted accordingly. Note that quarterback values diminish in PPR formats, so deductions should be made for accurate valuations. Recent updates have seen changes in player values due to various factors such as trades and injuries, including increases for Josh Downs, Michael Pittman Jr., and Alec Pierce, and slight decreases for Diontae Johnson and Rashod Bateman. The top NFL players have been ranked based on their performance this season. The leaders include: * Quarterbacks: Matthew Stafford, Russell Wilson, and Joe Flacco are among the top performers. * Running backs: Saquon Barkley, Derrick Henry, and Christian McCaffrey lead the pack. * Wide receivers: Tyreek Hill, A.J. Brown, Ja'Marr Chase, and Cooper Kupp are among the top scorers. The rankings also show that: * The top five running back duos in the league are led by Barkley and Kyren Williams. * The top five wide receiver trios in the league are led by Hill, Brown, and Chase. * The top 10 receivers in the league include players like Deebo Samuel, Tee Higgins, and Amari Cooper. The rankings also highlight the emergence of some younger players, including: * Running backs like Bijan Robinson, Breece Hall, and Jahmyr Gibbs * Wide receivers like Jordan Addison, Xavier Worthy, and Jameson Williams Overall, the rankings provide a snapshot of the top performers in the NFL this season. In standard scoring formats for 12-team fantasy football leagues using a half-Point Per Reception (PPR) system, the value points assigned to top tight ends vary greatly, from T.J. Hockenson's relatively modest values of 141 and 13 in two different metrics, to Travis Kelce's significantly higher values of 40 and 24.
