As I stepped out of my cart, drenched in rain... it was no surprise to anyone that Aliyan, our loyal servant, had come back, soaked from head to toe. He usually accompanied me on my trips back home and this time was no exception. The rain had been relentless for four days and we were battered by the floods. But despite the chaos, I thought there would be some respite when I reached home. Little did I know that Bashir, my younger brother-in-law, had arrived with his luggage... and other unexpected surprises. The phone rang, shrill in my ear. "Jaffar!..." I answered, expecting to hear my friend's cheerful voice. But instead, Jaffar was gruff, sounding distant. I asked him if he'd packed for the trip the next day to visit my sister's house and bring some essentials. But his response left me bewildered. He said he hadn't packed anything... or had he? The confusion continued as our conversation went on, with phone lines getting tangled. Just then, my sister Sajna picked up the phone, her voice calm but amused. It turned out that she was in the middle of preparing for her own wedding celebration, which was just a day away. I couldn't help but laugh at the absurdity of it all... and Jaffar's antics.
