Not my cake

My father and my niece have a wonderful tradition. Born just 69 years and one week apart, they have celebrated their birthdays together for as long as my niece has had a birthday. Last night, we all went out to eat and then went to my sister's house to open presents and have birthday cake. I live just a few blocks from a wonderful Italian bakery. They make the best chocolate cake ever, so I offered to bring the cake.

Last year, my father turned 90 and my niece turned 21, and so I bought a single candle that said "21" on it and put in nine candles, and they blew them out together. But this year, with my father turning 91 and my niece 22, I could think of no simple means of representing these ages in candles—without burning my sister's house down.

I thought, as long as the bakery was writing "HAPPY BIRTHDAY" on the cake, they could just as easily write "HAPPY BIRTHDAYS!" followed by "22 & 91." Then I could put a single candle by each age and simplify the whole complicated (but mandatory) candle-blowing-out procedure.

So that's what I did. A nice young woman repeated the message back to me on the phone, and I headed out the next day to pick up the cake.

"Right here!" a young man who I had not seen working there before said.

"Could I have a quick look at it?" I asked.

I only asked because they put their cakes in sturdy boxes tied up with two lengths of strong ribbon and knot the ribbon at the top. It makes it easy to carry the heavy cake home, but there is no way of opening the box without scissors.

"Sure!" the young man said.

The cake said, "HAPPY BIRTHDAY."

I knew the young woman had understood me, so I suspected this was not my cake. I told the young man that the ages should be on the cake, and he took the first cake back and went looking for my cake.

He was gone a very long time.

"Got it!" he finally said when he returned with another cake.

"Can I have a look at it?" I asked again. At this point, I was starting to feel like a bit of a

Tips to Support Your Digestive Health

(StatePoint) — Ever have that feeling of sluggishness that you can't seem to shake? Did you know that it could be because your digestive system isn't working optimally? For better digestive wellness, consider the following tips:

Hone Your Diet

Eat a diverse diet and limit processed foods and added sugars. A well-rounded diet that prioritizes whole foods is typically high in fiber and other nutrients that promote a healthy gut. Some great choices include beans, seeds, fruits, broccoli, kimchi and avocados.

Stay Hydrated

As you increase your fiber intake, be sure to drink plenty of water to support regularity and keep everything moving through your system. Your digestive system will thank you!

Get Moving

Daily activity is a natural digestive aid. Exercise boosts circulation to deliver blood and oxygen to your digestive tract, helps you maintain a healthy metabolism, and keeps your digestive muscles strong. For greater digestive wellness, be sure to incorporate some movement into your routine.

Manage Stress

The mind-body connection is powerful, and poor digestive health is just one of the many potential side effects of too much stress. Common stress management techniques include meditation, self-care, exercise and reaching out to loved ones.

Get Quality Sleep

High-quality sleep is needed to keep all the systems of your body in tip-top shape, and your digestive system is no exception. The Mayo Clinic recommends that adults get more than 7 hours of sleep per night.

Get a Massage

According to research, abdominal massage is a safe, easy remedy for occasional constipation that most people can do themselves.

Take Fiber Supplements

Less than 10% of Americans get enough fiber from diet alone, making a fiber supplement an excellent way to boost your intake.

One great option to consider, which is associated with a number of wellness benefits, is Metamucil 4-in-1 Lemonade Flavored Psyllium Fiber Supplement Powder.

Stay Consistent

New habits can be hard to adopt. To kickstart your commitment to digestive health and to stay motivated, try taking on the Metamucil Two Week Challenge. After you sign up on the brand's website, you'll receive an email every day for two weeks with tips, tricks, and reminders for taking your fiber supplement and for staying on track. Many of those who have taken the challenge felt noticeable results. In fact, in a survey of adults who completed the two-week challenge, a majority self-reported that they felt lighter.

"Psyllium fiber supplements have the potential to make a meaningful change in your digestive health when taken daily," says Evan Smith, NA Metamucil brand director. "That's why we're excited to help people see just how amazing a healthy gut feels."

For more information and to sign up for the challenge, visit metamucil.com.

nuisance, but the staff was as friendly as always, so I went around the counter and looked at the cake.

It said, “HAPPY BIRTHDAY 55.”
“This is not my cake,” I told the young man.

By now, the manager—or at least a more senior member of the staff—had taken an interest.

“Aren’t you Karen Carlson?” the manager asked.

“No. I’m Carrie Classon.”
The two bakery employees looked at the cake.

“We gave someone the wrong cake,” the young man announced.

By now, a young woman (I believe the one who took the order) was involved. She confirmed what the cake should have said, and the manager wrote it down on a piece of paper, and the young man disappeared into the back again.

“So sorry for the delay!” the manager said. After a long wait, a new cake appeared. “HAPPY BIRTHDAYS! 22 & 91” it read.

They tied up the cake with very strong ribbon, and I walked home with my cake. And at least twice every block, I stopped to laugh out loud.

Because I knew Karen did not check her cake.

She had already taken that cake to someone who was going to get the most confusing birthday message they have had in all their 55 years.

Till next time,
Carrie

HEALTHY LIVING

March is National Save Your Vision Month

Save Your Vision Month in March reminds us that eye health is important to aging and living well.

According to the National Institute on Aging, vision changes are common as we age. In 2021, more than one-quarter of U.S. adults age 71 and older had vision impairment, according to a study on health and aging trends. Common vision changes include difficulty distinguishing colors, adjusting to light changes and seeing close up.

Getting your eyes checked is the first step to protecting your vision and addressing any vision loss. Comprehensive eye exams are performed by ophthalmologists and optometrists. If needed, they can prescribe vision aids, like glasses or contacts, or prescribe medicines. The National Eye Institute provides resources to find free or low-cost eye care.

There are changes you can make now to help your vision. The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention shares these tips for maintaining healthy eyes:

- Wear sunglasses to protect eyes from ultraviolet rays.
- Take a break from computers or screens.
- Eat healthy foods for proper nutrition. Texercise provides tools and resources to make learning about nutrition easier.
- Know your family’s health history. Being aware of any eye-related diseases or conditions in your family can help doctors know what to look for when they perform their eye exam.

For more information, connecting to local resources can be helpful:

- Prevent Blindness Texas has information about eye-related diseases and resources that can help.
- The Texas Workforce Commission Older Individuals Who are Blind Program connects people 55 and older who have vision loss with resources and helpful tools.
- The Texas Health and Human Services Vision Loss in Older Adults page has a variety of programs and resources to help maintain eye health and connect to resources.

The Texas Workforce Commission Vocational Rehabilitation Program helps individuals with vision loss get ready for a job, or find or keep a job.
