
TRENDS

2025 Interior Design Trends: Designers Predict What's Next

Author:

/ December 20, 2024

As we tie a bow on 2024, we asked designers across the country to share their predictions for interior design trends in 2025. From personality-driven spaces to a rise in statement wallcoverings to color forecasting and more, they had a lot to say about what might be on the horizon. Read on to get the scoop.

Expressing Individuality

"Artisanal pieces will be taking center stage in 2025. People are seeking more individuality in the spaces they are trying to transform. There also a huge emphasis on wellness, bringing in loads of greenery and offering moments of tranquility to alleviate from daily stressors."

- Helen Bergin, Helen Bergin Interiors | Palm Beach, Florida

Tour a warm and welcoming Palm Beach abode by Helen Bergin Interiors here.

Photo: Abigail Mair

This Bergin-designed bedroom offers moments of tranquility.

Love For Layered Spaces

"I am seeing a more color forward 2025. Hints of neo-classicism are coming up even in modern interiors. People are opting for more layered homes over minimalism and spaces that feel more personal and a little less perfect. Textured walls and cozy spaces. Adding more function is critical with adding in more storage."

- Susie Novak, Susie Novak Interiors | Oakland, California

Photo: R. Brad Knipstein

Novak thoughtfully updated the living room of this old ranch style home originally built in 1937.