

Cassina Dudet

Since 1927, Cassina's pioneering attitude has combined avant-garde technological skill with traditional craftsmanship, working with architects, designers and creatives to envision new forms. Designed by Patricia Urquiola, the Dudet family features welcoming curves and architectural design, characterised by a strong stylistic reference to the 1970s with a unique aesthetic that offers comfort. Dudet is defined by three padded elements: the seat and two sinuous tubular elements that, in a continuous line, create the legs, armrests and a backrest. The Dudet bold sofa – visually and materially amplified as if observed through a magnifying lens – boasts generous proportions; its seat cushion contours almost reach down to the floor, emphasising its spacious and cosy form. The collection also embodies circularity due to its innovative disassembly system that allows the metal structure to be separated from its padding, thus facilitating the recycling of its materials. The model's upholstery can also be removed thanks to a zip, available in grey or black, that runs along the internal arch of the legs.
