Oftentimes an interdisciplinary approach will yield the most interesting and unexpected designs. Christopher Shields, Founder and Principal Designer of his namesake firm, takes that idea to an entirely new level, blending a whole-brained and holistic approach with degrees in interior design and physics. Shields says, “My education and experience allow me to bring a thoughtful and creative method to my work. Being able to ask the right questions, analyze and express my ideas is the foundation of my work.” Today Shields has nearly 20 years of experience in interior design. “I strive to create conversations around good design, architecture and craft—and how they coalesce to change one’s life,” he says. “My designs are both naturally evocative and precise, connecting my clients’ hearts and homes together through beautiful interiors. For me, it all comes down to designing homes that grow love.”

Creative Flow

Shields’s strength in both the arts and sciences means he has a creative and methodical system for his work. He calls his process “Designed Satisfaction:”

- First is “Discovery,” where we connect to client passions, gather requirements, build budgets and begin the genesis of ideas.
- Second is “Design Development,” where we focus on what makes a client’s heart race and present designs for approval.
- Third up is “Interiors Realization,” where we manage logistics, installation and home styling.
- We complete with a “Reveal,” celebrating the new home—ready for connections, moments and memories to be made.
