If a rider qualifies for more than one class above they will only obtain championship points for the class they nominate at the beginning of the championship

A rider who intermittently rides a qualifying pre 65 or twin-shock machine will be eligible for championship points in the pre65/twinshock class as well as one of the main classes when they choose to ride a modern bike. These riders will like every other have to nominate their modern class at the first trial they attend on the modern bike and stick with it for that year's championship.

Section Splits

Each section will start with a pair of green start cards. All riders enter the section at this point and begin being marked. Exception: There may be rare occasions where different classes start at different point but these will be clearly marked and riders informed at the riders briefing before the trial starts.

Riders should keep the red cards on their right hand side and the blue cards on the left hand side until they reach the yellow end cards where the section ends and scoring stops. If however a pair of different coloured cards are found in a section they identify a route split. Yellow cards are used to identify a beginner route split, white cards are used to identify an intermediate route split and green cards are used to identify an expert route split. These cards should be laid out so that no confusion can exist about which card should be on the right and which is on the left. Riders who quality should follow their specific class split until the colour they are following joins back to the main route. This is signalled by a combination of cards being displayed with the split cards backing up the red and blue main route cards. There are often times when a rider sees many cards on the same location. This is just showing where all the routes combine back in to one. Splits may be short or long and there may be more that one split in a section for a class. i.e. the hard route goes over a big step and rejoins the main route afterwards but then splits again to go over another obstacle before rejoining. Multiple cards will not be displayed when splits end at the section end cards as all riders must pass the end. Marking stops when a machines front wheel spindle passes the end cards.
