

Why Tariff Deadlines are a Distraction

'It is not despair, for despair is only for those who see the end beyond all doubt. We do not.' Gandalf, Lord of the Rings

In a Nutshell:

- All this breathless pursuit of (reciprocal) tariff deadlines (to strike a deal) is an unhelpful distraction diverting attention away from greater underlying geo-economic threats.
- For one, the sheer enormity of task at hand (striking a deal with all trade partners) necessitates that can-kicking in form or another will have to paper over the conspicuous resolution and/or deal.
- Second, and crucially, (reciprocal) tariff deadlines distract from far more consequential, and expedient, sectoral tariffs, which arguably reverberate across global industrial eco-systems.
- In effect, reciprocal tariffs deadlines pose a "bait and switch" risk as sectoral tariffs may still assault regardless of "reciprocal trade deals".
 - Market Impact: Sectoral tariffs could hit specific sectors/equities differentiated across countries by "carve outs" and/or quotas (if any) in trade deals.
- Moreover, it plays into US grand strategy to "divide and rule" (to US' advantage) as self-interest on reciprocal tariffs erode will for (more effective) collective bargaining on sector tariffs.
- Finally, the frantic tariff deadline race series distracts from US' primary goal to isolate China from trade partners, supply-chains, resources and markets.
- The real danger is underestimating the fallout when (rather than if) China hits back – both the US and trade partners deemed to be aligned with the US to the detriment of China.
- Asia generally is more vulnerable, given dependence on both US and China casting a shadow on sustained AXJ buoyancy through further tariff shifts. ASEAN in particular may feel more acute squeeze between China and US.
 - FX Impact: "Sell America" cover form a bearish USD may wear thin. And outside of (deal-)imposed appreciation, AXJ may by and large relatively under-perform Majors (led by EUR).

Distraction Devoid of a Verdict

- Despite averting despair, tariff deadlines that invariably grip markets are but an unhelpful distraction from greater geoeconomic threats amid persistently elevated uncertainty.
- Consequently, tariff deadlines are merely set up for (potential) "announcement volatility", and not a verdict that draw a line under trade/tariff risks.

- To be sure, headline risks associated with the approaching 1st August reciprocal tariff deadline (to strike a deal) will remain prominent.
- But this will be more noise than it is resolution and/or clarity for three key reasons.

1. Can-Kicking Rolls Over Risks

- As demonstrated by repeatedly deferred tariff/trade deal deadlines, kicking the can down the road remain likely one way or another.

First 14 Tariff Letters That Dictates a Tariff Rate (“Letter Tariffs”)

	Apr Reciprocal Tariffs (ART)	"Letter Tariffs"	Difference (%-pts)
Japan	24%	25%	1%
Korea	25%	25%	0%
Thailand	36%	36%	0%
Malaysia	24%	25%	1%
Indonesia	32%	32%	0%
Cambodia	49%	36%	-13%
Laos	48%	40%	-8%
Myanmar	44%	40%	-4%
Bangladesh	37%	35%	-2%
South Africa	30%	30%	0%
Serbia	37%	35%	-2%
Bosnia and Herzegovina	35%	30%	-5%
Tunisia	28%	25%	-3%
Kazakhstan	27%	25%	-2%

- Even the “tariff letters”, which unilaterally imposed tariffs subject to a deal, are but a time-buying move. So, essentially. It is a case of one deadline chasing another.
 - Even the claimed deals (UK, China, and Vietnam) are scant in binding details. Essentially, showboating over substance. Whereas underlying trade risks are merely papered over.
 - The wider point being, inking a daunting number of deals in an impossibly narrow window imposes binding trade-off. Between breadth, depth and speed (of deals), something has to give.
- Breadth of trade partners engage: Where over 90 countries had been targeted only three incomplete deal/framework have been stuck (UK, Vietnam, China).
 - Depth of trade deal details: Deals are at best scant, if not flimsy. And that leaves too much room for future rifts.
 - Speed of deals: Any attempt to get into meaningful details on the deals being a setback to unrealistically tight deadlines.

- Upshot being, can-kicking (be it by way of overt deadline extensions, or “fake it till you make it” deal frameworks) seldom deliver durable resolutions.
- Consequently, depriving markets of attendant clarity on reliable risk pricing. Which means risks merely rollover with latent volatility intact.

2. Sectoral Tariffs - The “Bait & Switch”:

- Crucially, deadlines dangling the threat of “additional” reciprocal tariffs over a baseline 10% distract from far more consequential (and strategic) sectoral tariffs.
- Point being, evolving and expanding sectoral tariff have the potential for significantly outsized global industrial impact via the wider up-/down-stream ecosystem.
- Moreover, sectoral tariffs invoked under Section 232 of the 1962 Trade Expansion Act, may be enacted by President relatively unchallenged (unlike more contentious invocation of Emergency Acts).

Sectoral (Section 232) Tariffs

Category	Tariff Rate	Status	Note
Steel & Aluminium	50%	25% on 12th March 50% step-up Effective 4th June
Auto & Auto parts	25%	Effective 3rd May
Semiconductors	Pending Investigation	Investigation since 1st April
Pharmaceuticals	Pending Investigation	Investigation since 1st April	Trump: "Up to 200%" Tariffs
Copper	Pending Investigation	Investigation since 10th March	Trump: 50% Tariff
Heavy Trucks	Pending Investigation	Investigation since 22nd April
Processed Critical Minerals/Derivatives	Pending Investigation	Investigation since 22nd April
Commercial Aircraft & Jet Engines	Pending Investigation	Investigation since 1st May
Timber & Lumber	Pending Investigation	Investigation since 10th March

Note: Section 232 tariffs under the Trade Expansion Act of 1962 allow the President to enact, relatively unchallenged (unlike tariffs based on Emergency Acts). And so, Section 232 tariffs may have far greater global industrial impact and may be more consequential than reciprocal tariffs.

- Simply put, sectoral tariffs are not only far more consequential but more expedient as well.
- Given this critical context, it becomes clearer that reciprocal tariffs, deadlines and deals are simply "bait and switch" trap.
- Which (purposefully or inadvertently) exhausts (negotiating) efforts, and exploits vulnerabilities, only to out-flank with sectoral tariffs.
- This is precisely why trade talks with Japan, EU and other major industrial powers are being stymied.
- As seasoned trade negotiators see through the multi-pronged "bait and switch" tariff assault.
- And so, for major trade partners/industrial leaders, focus on attaining carve outs/quotas for key industries.
- From a grand strategy perspective (intended or otherwise), reciprocal tariff deadlines facilitate the Trump Administration's strategy "divide and rule".
- Exploiting the domination of self-interest involved in reciprocal tariff negotiations to inevitably to erode the will for (more effective/advantageous) collective bargaining on sectoral tariffs.
- Market Impact: Sectoral tariffs could hit specific sectors/equities differentiated across countries by "carve outs" and /or quotas (if any) in trade deals

3. The China Threat

- Finally, US intent to clip Beijing's economic reach/influence by isolating China from its trade partners, supply-chains, resources and markets is conspicuous.
- This was evident in the Vietnam deal, where Vietnam's two-tier 20%/40% (which straddles 30% tariffs on China) trains the higher rate on Chinese transshipments.
- Clearly, the intent is to not dis-incentivize trade partners ability to be substitute for China.
- And arguably, even more importantly, to penalize any facilitation of China's exports passage and/or industrial dominance.

- Fact is, all of US trade partners will be subject to this “anti-China” dimension of any “deal” given centrality of China’s effective containment to US agitations to retain geoeconomic dominance.
- It will be naïve to suggest that China is oblivious to US’ malicious intent. And even more foolhardy to assume China will not retaliate passive.
- To that end, China retaliation is unlikely to be confined US alone. Instead, Asian economies aligned with the US at the expense of China may be most vulnerable to Beijing’s wrath.
- Given significant reliance on both China and US, Asia is particularly vulnerable to geoeconomic crossfire.
- Notably, ASEAN is especially faced with the threat of significant collateral damage as its squeezed between upstream/supply-chain/investment dependence on China and US market access.

“Pay America (Risks)” May Overwhelm “Sell America” Cover

- To be sure, the “cover” of “Sell America” USD bears propping up AXJ into trade uncertainties is an anomaly. One which may not last.
- And so, as US-China crossfire risks grow alongside the impact of sectoral tariffs, the illusion of AXJ resilience may start to give way to more two-way volatility.
- Furthermore, greater differentiation across AXJ is also par for the course depending on; i) reciprocal tariff specifics; ii) China/CNH impact; iii) sectoral tariff impact.
- Crucially, whether trade deals entail currency appreciation requirements (as presumably anticipated by TWD and marginally factored into KRW) could also trigger abrupt adjustments.
- Regardless, the “Pay America” extraction of multi-dimensional tariffs could impose (despite “Sell America” USD bears) comparatively more on AXJ, which by and large may relatively under-perform Majors – led by EUR.
