

Why the MAS Will Not Ease

"There is nothing more to be said or to be done tonight, so hand me over my violin and let us try to forget for half an hour the miserable weather and the still more miserable ways of our fellowmen." – Sherlock Holmes

In a Nutshell:

- At the risk of some exaggeration, flattening the S$NEER is the proverbial hammer. But this economy is not necessarily a nail (yet).
- For one, despite the sharp drop in inflation that theoretically lowers the bar for easing, it has not durably depressed enough to warrant urgent easing.
- Neither does the resiliency of growth, which has well overshoot previous estimates.
- Especially with extremely elevated trade uncertainty/risks mitigated by trade deals that lower tariffs from what was threatened on "Liberation Day" back in April.
- Moreover, with sufficient "insurance" easing in place, the argument for an imminent easing (by suspending S$NEER appreciation bias) is neither compelling nor convenient for policy coherence.
- Finally, capacity and inclination for more targeted and tailored fiscal buffer favours that the MAS retains "dry gunpowder" in view of fluid risks and lingering uncertainty.
- Notably, a rich S$NEER within the current policy allows for significant defacto easing, in the event of adverse demand shocks (from S$NEER adjusting lower from the top-end of the band).
- All said, the MAS is arguably in pole position to stand pat.
 - S$NEER Impact: Given that the S$NEER is already rich, despite slight slippage on marginal dovish bets. So, this could limit any pick-up reflex on MAS restraint disappointing dovish bets to just 15-30bp of S$NEER gains.

MAS will Stand Pat with a Dovish Hold Rather than Ease

- To be sure, the MAS arguably has options and a certain degree of flexibility for calibrated easing if it so wishes.
- But the bottom-line is that the most optimal choice may be for the MAS to stand pat rather ease for the third* consecutive meeting by reducing/flattening the S$NEER slope.
- Not because another round of easing will risk unleashing inflationary spirals or undermining wider SGD and/or macro stability.
- Rather, because it can afford, and perhaps benefit more from, some "dry gunpowder" given exceptionally elevated uncertainty.

* The MAS eased at the January and April meetings by "slightly reducing" the slope of the S$NEER.

Inflation Has Fallen Significantly

- In fact, by conventional price stability metrics, the sharp inflation deceleration both headline and core (to below 1%) ostensibly provides scope for the MAS to ease.
- Not only has, the drop in CPI has been both profound and sustained, but it is also pervasive, spanning across goods, housing and services.
- What' more, the current sub-1% inflation range is not inconsistent with periods of a flattened S$NEER slope previously.

- Simply put, inflation could understandably be construed as a license to ease. Specifically, to suspend S$NEER appreciation bias.

But Not Enough to Suspend S$NEER Appreciation

- But such an overtly dovish reflex on account of inflation's decline may prove misguided.
- For one, the underlying inflation trend suggests that the pullback in inflation falls short of a decisive trigger to suspend S$NEER appreciation.
- And this is not just on account of prudent restraint given the recency of extremely elevated inflation, which may justifiably be criticized for being back-ward looking.
- Instead, the *absence of a distinct economic shock, which has typically the case for a flat S$NEER (suspended S$NEER appreciation trend).
- Point being, scope to ease on the back of inflation, while distinct in the headline, is perhaps overstated in the wider context.

 Episodes of suspended S$NEER appreciation (flattened S$NEER slope) were triggered by the “China shock” in 2016 and COVID shock in 2020.

Growth Backstopped, Possibly Resilient:

- What's more, growth has also been counter-intuitively resilient, backstopped by a mix of global front-loading and service sector buffer.
- Admittedly, those looking into details could fault under-performance and latent fragilities in manufacturing.
- But with H1 GDP momentum alone contributing 2%-pts to 2025 growth (topping the government's 0-2% GDP projection), it would take a sharp, broad-based, H2 contraction to justify a full-throated dovish response.
- And so, given the MAS resisted flattening the S$NEER slope in April when trade uncertainties and attendant growth fears were arguably greater, it is even more inconvenient (for policy signalling) to do so now.

Trade Risks Mitigated Despite (Still) Elevated Uncertainty:

- Especially as nascent trade deals emerging, at (generally) lower tariff rates than those threatened in the April Liberation Day assault on the global trading order, diminish extreme "tail risks".
- To be sure, US trade policy uncertainties, despite being diminished, still remain elevated. Accordingly, the global demand outlook is shrouded, if not tentative.

- Nonetheless, the marginal policy response to diminished uncertainties/”tail risks” is probably not to ease aggressively further, but perhaps to retain dovish options.

Sufficient “Insurance”:

- More so, given sufficient, front-loaded, “insurance” easing in 2025 (both at the January and April meetings) that have been met by diminished risk of adverse demand shocks.
- With back-to-back slope reductions, the MAS has arguably tempered the expectations of the pace of trade-weighted SGD appreciation.
- To that end, the argument for “dry gunpowder”, and not “over-insuring” downside risks is better aligned with a highly fluid and potentially volatile outlook.

Fiscal Largesse Picking Up the Slack:

- What’s more, there is both scope and inclination for fiscal stimulus to cushion demand shocks in a more targeted and tailored manner.
- Already cash transfers to households in the current “SG 60” budget have arguably put in place some “pre-loaded” demand buffer.
- And more support for business/industries tailored to address the exact tariff blows and knock-on supply-chain impact is likely to be forthcoming as needed.
- Effectively, resulting in more efficient and effective policy (monetary-fiscal) burden-sharing, rather than monetary policy doing all the heavy lifting at increasingly costly trade-offs.

Backed by Latent Accommodation Within a Rich S$NEER:

- What’s more, a rich S$NEER at the top-end of the policy bands suggest that SGD is close to maxing out restriction within the current setting.
- Whereas, in the event of an adverse global demand shock, the S$NEER could adjust down within the policy bands to potentially provide effective, instantaneous and significant easing.
- In other words, the MAS has potentially automatic, defacto easing latitude baked into the current policy setting.
- Which not only reinforces the point that the MAS no urgency to ease imminent, but also wisdom (and greater policy benefit) “dry gunpowder”.

S$NEER Policy – Of Hammers, Nails & Needles:

- All said, and at the risk of some exaggeration, flattening the S$NEER is the proverbial hammer. But this economy, in a more holistic sense is not necessarily a nail.
- Put differently imminent easing is neither easing, nor the optimal policy course. At least not yet.
- And if we are right about standing pat, then the marginal dovish bets that have nudged the S$NEER off the top of the band are likely to be disappointed. Perhaps even wrong-footed.
- S$NEER Impact: Given^ limited policy band headroom, despite slippage on marginal dovish bets, a MAS hold reflex may not move the S$NEER (and corresponding SGD)needle much. Likely limited to a tight 15-30bp S$NEER uptick.

^Based on our S$NEER model estimates of a rich S$NEER that is 150-180bp above the mid-point despite slipping from more elevated levels (close to the +200bp presumed limit from policy mid-point).
