Three Take-Aways

- 1) US headline CPI printing in line with expectations sets stage Sept rate cut. While core inflation acceleration is uncomfortable, August NFP print released on 5 Sept will be more critical.
- In fact, Bessent has floated the idea of a 50bps cut based on NFP revisions. Bessent is hopeful that Miran will be on Fed board before Sept meeting.
- 3) Bank of Thailand expected to cut rates today amid various growth soft spots though communication likely to emphasize on limited policy room.

MACRO THEME: A Wobbly Stage

- After the US CPI print last night, markets appear to be setting the stage for the Fed to cut policy rates by 25bps with odds being raised to 96% from 88% on Monday. US equities rallied on rate cut prospects while UST front end yields declined.
- To be clear, details in the CPI print were mixed with both dovish and hawkish camps having something to seize on. Doves were keen to point to overall headline inflation slowing to 0.2% MoM aided by lower grocery and petrol prices. Hawks would have certainty taken note of the higher core inflation which accelerated to 0.3% MoM amid elevated services inflation. Airfares and dental services were key drivers to the higher pace of services inflation
- Tariff related categories also continued to see the cost passthrough though the price momentum appears to be somewhat slowing. Apparel prices rose 0.1% MoM, video and audio products prices grew at 0.8% while home furnishing roses 0.7% MoM. While it may be tempting to frame these as "manageable", it is perhaps worth considering that these price adjustments may be reflecting their associated price elasticities as the likes of apparel may have more elastic demand and firms may find it hard to pass on price increases. Consequently, firms and their entire supply chain are attempting to manage these costs and whether these consumer prices are ultimately viewed as manageable by consumers would rest on the retail sales prints.
- That said, a 25bps cut for September at this juncture is not being based on the technicalities within CPI print as the focus remains on growth and labour market amid the dismal NFP print.
- Nonetheless, Fed officials remain slightly hawkish with Kansas City Fed President Schmid saying that retaining a modestly restrictive monetary policy remains appropriate, though his caveat was that he was ready to change his views if demand weakens significantly. Meanwhile Barkin was more balanced saying that the balance between jobs and inflation remain unclear and that they will get a lot of information for the next meeting. The next NFP print will be closely watched to affirm growth concerns.
- In the meantime, Trump's nomination for the BLS chief, Antoni, has floated the idea of suspending monthly jobs report but keep publishing more accurate but less timely, quarterly data. Given his senate confirmation in October, the September FOMC meeting would be unaffected.

- Separately, on monetary policy, Bessent said that the real thing to think about is should we get a 50bps cut in September, emphasizing that the Fed could have been cutting in June, July if they had the revised figures.

Yields (2Y: -3.7bp; 10Y: +0.4bp; 30Y: +2.7bp)

- Front end yields decline following CPI print though longer end yield rose.

Equities (Nasdaq: +1.4%; S&P 500: +1.1%; Dow: +1.1%)

- US equities rose across the board.

FX (DXY: -0.4%)

- USD slipped against all G10 peers amid lower UST yields. EUR rose above mid-1.16. AUD rose back above 65 cents after post RBA decision weakness driven by lower growth and inflation forecast from the RBA's latest Monetary Policy Statement. USD/JPY slipped below 148.

China: Chips

- While Beijing has issued notices discouraging the use of H20 processors from Nvidia especially for government and national security related work, it remains notable that this falls short of an outright ban. In any case, an outright ban is hardly intuitive given the pursuit of Al superiority and objectives of securing leadership in related areas such as robotics and EVs. Attaining downstream leadership would also aid future support for these upstream efforts in terms of chip innovation rather than crippling downstream progress for these national security concerns.

BoT: Growth Soft Spots

- The BoT is expected to cut rates by 25bps at their upcoming meeting to provide further monetary accommodation to support growth. Admittedly, even though the rate is a blunt tool to address their economic woes, it is one which is needed at this juncture which may dovetail with fiscal policies. Since their previous meeting in June when they kept rates unchanged, economic indicators continue to reveal soft spots. Value added production showed that there was broad based decline in the industrial sector aside from petroleum products and computer, electronics and optical instruments. The latter likely continue to benefit from the on-going exemptions from the US.
- Even in the services sector, while we had expected the July tourism seasonality boost to come through, the seasonal surge is much weaker and likely a result of the confluence of political instability, border conflict and broader concerns over scams. The 287k MoM increase in visitors for July 2025 falls far short of the observed in July 2024 of 363k. The shortfall appears to stem from the Asia Pacific region as visitors from Europe rose. Specially within Asia, decline in tourist from Malaysia and China were the key drivers for almost the entirety of the decline alongside fellow ASEAN countries. On the inflation front, headline deflation figures remain distorted by petrol and electricity prices while core inflation at 0.8% YoY indicate that prices pressure remain prevalent.
- All in, amid these rate cuts, the BoT will inadvertently have to bring up the case for limited ammunition remaining and ward off expectations of consecutive cuts. As for the THB, the BoT's acknowledgement of economic soft spots though will continue to aid buoyancy above 32 levels and front end yields will remain pressured.
