Three Take-Aways

- 1) Trump has greenlit more advanced Nvidia AI chips to China amid rising AI bubble worries. However, soaring orders from China may not be guaranteed this time.
- 2) The tone from China's December Politburo meeting sounds less supportive, signaling tolerance for a below-5% increase in 2026.
- 3) Vietnam's growth aided by seasonal and cyclical tailwinds; VND at risk from the close trading band limit and lower reserves.

MACRO THEME: More Chip Exports?

- President Trump has greenlit Nvidia to export its more advanced H200 AI chips to China on the condition of a 25% surcharge.
- The shipments, Trump emphasized, will be restricted to "approved customers" only. He also noted that other US chipmakers, including Intel and AMD, will be eligible under the same arrangement.
- This move follows weeks of intense deliberation between Trump and his advisers over whether to loosen restrictions on H200 exports amid growing market anxiety about an AI-driven bubble.
- According to Trump, President Xi has responded to this decision favorably.
- However, this approval may not necessarily trigger a surge in Nvidia orders from China.
- Back in September, Chinese authorities reportedly advised domestic firms to avoid purchasing Nvidia chips when building new computing infrastructure.
- Furthermore, Moore Threads, the first Chinese GPU producer debuted on the Shanghai Stock Exchange's STAR Market, soared by 468.78% on its IPO day last week, pushing its market valuation beyond $42 billion.
- The company was founded just five years ago and is hailed as one of China's "Four GPU Dragons".

China: Exports Fueled by Diversification

- China's export growth exceeded market expectations, improving to 5.9% YoY in November, reversing October's decline.
- Despite improved trade relations with the US, this improvement was largely driven by market diversification rather than a recovery in US demand.
- Exports to the US continued the low double-digit decline, down 28.6% YoY, while shipments to the EU, Latam, and Africa all recorded double-digit increases.
- Separately, exports of rare earth minerals surged 24.4% YoY, the fastest pace in five months, reflecting progress in China's trade deal execution following the Trump-Xi meeting.

China: On the Horizon

- Inflation data due Wednesday is expected to show a sharp rebound, with November CPI growth accelerating to 0.9% YoY, by our estimate.
- This rebound is likely driven by food prices, particularly vegetables. Weekly wholesale data reveals fresh vegetable prices soared 16% YoY by late November, a stark reversal from October's 5% decline.
- Additionally, non-food inflation is expected to remain firm, supported by gains in precious metals such as gold and silver.
- While this inflation spike is unlikely to persist, it will probably lower the odds of the PBoC cutting rates before year-end.
- At its December Politburo meeting yesterday, Beijing reaffirmed its stance on monetary and fiscal policy—keeping them "moderately loose" and "more proactive," respectively.
- However, the tone was noticeably less supportive than last year, as the statement omitted previous pledges such as stabilizing the property market and guiding a moderate rise in prices.
- In our view, while Beijing is expected to maintain its 2026 growth target at "around 5%," policymakers appear increasingly willing to tolerate a growth rate that falls moderately below 5%.

Vietnam: Seasonal, Cyclical and Weather Factors

- Amid adverse weather conditions, Vietnam's economic data still printed rather positively though external demand appears to be slowly.
- Specifically, export revenue growth slowed leading to a small trade surplus of US$1.1b in November, down from the US$2.6b in October.
- Nonetheless, industrial production at 10.8% YoY which is robust because it represents a sequential output expansion of 2.3% MoM.
- Some seasonal factor into the Christmas period may be at play here with the likes of textiles, wearing apparel, foot wear showing robust expansion ranging 3-5% on a MoM basis.
- That said, the cyclical semiconductor led electronics boost was also evident with increase manufacture of computer electronic and optimal products growing 2.8% MoM.
- Notably, there was underlying divergence between AI business led needs and consumer demand with consumer electronics growing just 1% MoM lagging behind the electronic components and communication equipment manufacturing growth of 3.3-3.6%.
- On inflation, headline inflation soared to 3.6% YoY reflecting high food prices due to the adverse weather conditions and higher petrol prices while core inflation remain flat.
- On FX, the VND has a very narrow gap relative to the top of trading band. This will continue to impart pressure on FX reserves which hovers around 2 months even as trade surplus ought to lean against VND depreciation pressures. Even though there may be support from remittances, there is a lack of evident seasonality in VND with half of the December months in the past decade showing appreciation.
