

What the (CNH-INR) Himalayan Rift Reveals

In a Nutshell:

- The stark divergence between the CNH and INR – the Himalayan rift – in trends and direction of travel is emblematic of wider AxJ divergence that is likely to remain entrenched.
- That a resounding bearish USD trend (down 8-9%) has not lifted all AxJ suggests far for nuanced factors at work.
- So, a softer USD outlook into 2026, underpinned by Fed rate cuts, will not guarantee ubiquitous AxJ rallies.
- What's more, a "deal" with the US could lend some strength but is no guarantee of currency shine either.
- Crucially, even on familiar real spread dynamics AxJ prospects are highly variable, dependent on a conspiracy of relative policy shifts, fiscal dominance risks and (geo-)political uncertainty.
- The upshot is, amid lagged effects of tariffs (masked by front-running and delays) colliding with differentiated vulnerabilities and risk sensitivities, divergent AxJ performance will defy mean reversion and convergence.

Emblematic Divergence

- While the CNH is pushing 2025 highs while the rupee is suffering all-time lows (USD/INR going past 90).

- Notably, a softer USD has accentuated renminbi appreciation but has provided little relief for unrelenting rupee woes.
- This “Himalayan rift” between the currencies of the two largest economies in Asia – separated by the Himalayas – is emblematic of stark differentiation, and in some cases emphatic divergence, in AxJ.

Beyond USD Dictates

- This CNH-INR (wider AxJ) divergence means identifying the USD trend alone is insufficient to get a grip on AxJ undulations.
- To be sure, the broad USD trend remains crucial in determining the FX market backdrop
- Nonetheless, a more careful unpacking of country-specific nuances is required to appreciate wider AxJ.

Beyond Deals

- Admittedly, the conspicuous absence of a US-India trade deal, with punitive (secondary) tariffs on India in a turn of fortunes (and perceived US favours), is a dominant INR bugbear.
- Arguably, the US-China truce has leaned into CNH tone. But surely, entrenched structural risks in US-China relations must warn against complacency.
- The wider point really is that clinching a US trade deal alone – which only alleviates, but does not eliminate, purposefully inflicted tariffs pain – is no guarantee of coming out on top as the rolling risks of extortionist US trade/foreign policies are merely deferred, not effectively defused.

Beyond Headline Policy & Inflation

- What's more, shifts in policy differentials do not necessarily lend clarity to corresponding FX divergence. Not even when adjusted for shifts in inflation spreads.
- To be sure, the rupee may derive less support from dis-inflation (sharp as it may be) that is exaggerated by transitory food deflation as compared to more emphatic CNH support from China's entrenched, possibly structural), deflation.
- Especially if the RBI's propensity for rate cuts has greater sensitivity to any step-up in the Fed's easing bias, in contrast to the PBoC's steadier pair of hands.

Conflation (Fiscal Dominance) & Concealment

- Likewise, AxJ dynamics into 2026 are likely to be differentiated by relative policy moves corresponding to the Fed. But crucially, on the conflation of monetary-fiscal-political risks.
- Point being, mounting risks of fiscal dominance amid accompanying political/geo-political uncertainty will inevitably feature prominently, obfuscating straight-forward policy spread gauges.
- Especially if inflation risks are concealed via fiscal subsidies and/or central bank balance sheets is used to absorb government debt burden.

* Assertion of fiscal will on monetary policy via direct pressures for rate cuts or leveraging on central bank balance sheets to subsidize fiscal largesse.

Gaps & Lags

- Furthermore, the financing/cash-flow gaps for investments, budgets and the Current Account will also be a prominent differentiator for AxJ.
- More so, as the lags from tariff front-running and/or pre-deal suspension of tariffs that lent to counter-intuitive resilience in trade/financial activity in 2025 warns of adverse cash-flow shocks potentially deferred to 2026.

Not All Boats

- The upshot is that a typically risk-conducive Fed rate cut cycle into 2026 may not be the tide that lifts all AxJ boats.
- Not even with a dial-back in tariff antagonism (mitigating heightened geoeconomic/trade risks), at least temporarily mitigated ahead of 2026 US mid-term elections.
- That's to say, even with a broad-brush of a softer USD, supportive liquidity amid further global monetary policy easing, and softer oil prices the outcomes across AxJ will be highly differentiated.

Neither Convergence nor Mean Reversion

- All said, the fast-evolving (rather than durably fading) risks suggest that neither that mean reversion (for specific AxJ currencies, and as) nor convergence across the AxJ space are likely to be the baseline.
- For one, the persistence and dispersion of risks/threat challenge any assumption of mean reversion (to previous strength) for AxJ that have weakened (e.g. INR, IDR, PHP).
- What's more, varying sensitivities to fluid risks in a highly uneven global economy amid idiosyncratic geoeconomic threats suggest that divergence, not convergence, will be the default.
