Dec 10, 2025

Three Take-Aways

- 1) Markets fully priced a third 25bp Fed cut in December, but the reaction may turn hawkish. This could lift UST yields and the USD, even as longer-term risks point to further cuts into 2026.
- 2) Inflation expectations stayed anchored, underscoring Fed's challenge of balancing inflation control with growth.
- 3) The RBA held rates as expected. While AUD strength persists, upside inflation risks and labour data will determine whether hike bets gain traction.

MACRO THEME: More FOMC - A Hawkish, Insurance Cut?

- Another the third consecutive 25bp rate cut (to 3.50-3.75%) at the December FOMC is deemed a done deal.
- The delicious irony of such rich pricing is that the market response could be somewhat hawkish.
- This could be partly because of "buy the rumour, sell the fact" dynamics, which could unwind some of the baked in positions such that UST yields and the USD may be pushed gently higher.
- But crucially, also because the accompanying rhetoric and guidance could be decidedly hawkish.
- A critical factor in shaping this perception derives from the Fed now in late-stage "risk management" cuts.
- Specifically, in assessing the adequacy of pre-emptive cuts, with the consensus liable to tip in favour of increased confidence about sufficiency of "insurance cuts".
- And this is likely to sound like a hawkish turn to "enough (easing) done", thereby underpinning the "hawkish insurance cut" perception.
- Whereas this interim "hawkish shade" on easing merely distracts from room to cut further, likely to be exploited into mid-/late-2026.
- The inflation side of the prevailing inflation-jobs dilemma amid a data fog is merely a distraction.
- And hawks are merely rearranging the deck chairs on the Titanic rates will have much further down to go.
- Fact is inflation, and more importantly, inflation expectations are likely to be adequately subdued.
- Whereas the real danger to the Fed stems from perceptions of policy independence compromised, if not surrendered.
- This inadvertently gambles with the USD's reserve currency status and dominance.

Anchored Inflation Expectations

- November's New York Fed survey showed median inflation expectations steady at 3.2% for one year ahead and 3.0% for threeand five-year horizons.
- Inflation expectations for necessities rose notably, with medical care posting its largest increase since January 2014.

(US) FOMC Rate (Lower-Upper Bound)		3.50-3.75%	3.75%-4.00%

- Combined with higher inflation expectations for staples, these trends point to headwinds for consumption.
- JOLTs Job openings rose to 7.67M in October, but underlying signals were softer as layoffs edged up to 1.2% and quits fell to 1.8%, pointing to easing labor demand despite headline strength.
- Overall, inflation expectations remain anchored above Fed's target while consumer pessimism persists amid tighter credit and financial strain, highlighting policymakers' dual challenge of managing inflation and growth.

Japan: Earthquake Adds Policy Uncertainty

- The earthquake off northern Japan adds uncertainty to the December rate decision as short-term disruptions and reconstruction needs could prompt BOJ caution.
- JPY weakened to reflect the policy-delay risk.
- BOJ Governor Ueda signaled flexibility in policy yesterday, saying the BOJ will make an appropriate decision after reviewing data, but stopped short of confirming a December hike.
- Ueda also noted the recent rise in long-term yields is "somewhat fast" but reaffirmed they should remain market-driven.
- He added the BOJ will nimbly increase bond buying in exceptional
- Market still prices a 90% chance of a 25bp hike at the Dec 18-19
- Although a December hike remains the consensus, the earthquake and rising yields inject uncertainty, heightening the risk of a delay despite earlier hawkish signals.

Post RBA: All Round Discomfort Extended

- As we had alluded to, it is not surprising that the RBA did not explicitly consider a rate hike given that real rate remains positive at this juncture.
- Admittedly, this might change if the upside risks to inflation which their statement allude to materialises in the months ahead.
- Our view is that the extended hold is a stance that the RBA is more inclined towards unless real rates decline further.
- Specifically, on a trimmed mean inflation basis, if real rates fall into the negative territory, the RBA may then be nudged into another hike.
- Nonetheless, with Governor Bullock taking rate cuts off the table, financial conditions have tightened with markets absorbing her discomfort around current inflation, sending 3Y yields soaring by more than 10bps.
- Even amid the AUD outperformance, there is also little comfort for the RBA as non-tradables inflation remains the key bug bear.
- Looking ahead, durability of rate hike bets which backstop the AUD will need comfort from a robust labour market print for the RBA to follow
