Three Take-Aways

- 1) AI-driven sell-off indiscriminately swept more broadly across equities and commodities. Notably, including Gold. Only bonds were bid, with the 2-10 curve bull flattening.
- 2) Regardless of arguable ubiquity of AI application legitimately widening shakedown, the wider selloff in commodities/Gold have hallmarks of cross-liquidation involving financial contagion risks.
- 3) The RBA's "whatever it takes" moment on inflation fight fires up underlying AUD bulls. A firmer US CPI, following jobs outrun, may only modestly buoy USD, not enduringly overturn AUD bulls.

MACRO THEME: More Pervasive AI Shakedown

- Fears of AI decimating existing business models not only persisted, but became notably more pervasive.
- The resultant shakedown in equity markets (Dow: falling 1.3%, S&P tumbling 1.6% and Nasdaq plunging 2%) has broadened out across various industries.
- Following the software companies suffering threats of redundancy (from AI "take-over"), logistics, wealth management, commercial real estate, to name a few, have quickly followed suit.
- To be sure, AI's reach across industries turning more ubiquitous as the technology embeds itself more "organically" into society is not a shocking revelation.

Worrying "Correlation Creep"

- Nonetheless, there are increasingly legitimate worries – involving with "contagion" and froth in bull markets – associated with this "correlation creep", whereby AI-driven sell-off cascade more indiscriminately.
- For one, the sell-off extending across commodities – including industrial metals such as copper – suggests a degree of correlation from cross-liquidation associated with financial contagion risks.
- Point being, while sell-off in an "AI takeover" of industries may not unequivocally be adverse for all commodity demand.
- Especially considering the massive AI capex build-out (including a wider energy/transmission) of data/computing or capabilities.

Glitter Jitter

- Arguably, Gold's stumble from near $5,100 to test $4,900 coinciding with the "AI shakedown" is a case in point about financial contagions in unhealthy correlated markets, rather than identifiable, specific AI-related threats being re-priced.
- Perhaps even more so, considering the coincident "clean" haven boost for USTs – with 10Y yields falling >8bp (to 4.1%), in contrast to Gold's "haven appeal" losing shine.
- This may be framed as money hastening to get out of "frothy", glittery, parts of the market (that were previously chased higher) to get into steady, "safe", income.
- All said, it underscores the point that when pervasive AI exuberance turns on itself a wider shake-down in frothy markets may spare few.

Yields (2Y:-5.5bp; 10Y: -7.3bp; 30Y: -7.2bp)Equities (Nasdaq: -2.0%; S&P 500: -1.6%; Dow: -1.3%)*FX (DXY: 0.1%)*The RBA's "Whatever It Takes" Moment

- RBA Deputy Governors Hauser unequivocally hawkish bent at a fireside chat earlier this week, marked by his equivalent of "whatever it takes" [our paraphrasing], may echo bullish AUD for a while.
- The first take away was his allusion to inflation being "too high", requiring the RBA "get back to ... (its) day job" of taming inflation.
- Add to that RBA Governor Michelle Bullock's Senate testimony placing current estimate of NAIRU at 4.6%, underscore scope for more rate hikes (from current 3.85%)
- That's to say, after the 25bp hike earlier this month (from 3.65% to 3.85%), the RBA could easily have another 25-50bp left in it should it assess inflation risk to be "entrenched".

Fuel (Pre-Existing) AUD Bulls

- In turn, this lends itself to the pre-existing bullish AUD theme (which we published last year*) being underpinned further.
- In particular, as accentuated tailwinds from a hawkish RBA are further enhanced by the confluence of bullish structural factors.
- Notably, as AUD's allure as a USD hedge (amid underlying "Sell America") are rendered exceptionally more alluring by bullish metals proxy
- Specifically, as the AUD's bullish metal proxy attributes amplified by a conspiracy of; i) post-monetary largesse lift in metals; ii) AI capex buildout demand, and; iii) geopolitical resource domination themes.

Inflation Sensitivities ...* Please see the full publication here

- Ahead of US CPI later today, markets might be somewhat more sensitive/biased to dialing back dovish Fed bets on firmer/hotter-than-expected inflation prints.
- More so, when taken in context of the upside surprise in recent jobs data, which appears to have washed out some of the concerns of more dominant risks to jobs. If this is more pronounced than is expected, front-end UST yields may be lifted (bear flattening bias).
- Along with that, the Greenback could also get attendant boost. But this is expected to be modest, not overwhelming.

... & Inflated Fed Sensitivities?

- For one, the Fed still considers policy to be restrictive. Meaning that the direction of travel for rates is still tilted down.
- Crucially, as the Fed transitions from a "Powell Fed" to a "Warsh Fed" the case for lower rates – not just cyclically, but crucially, structurally on productivity gains – may be reinforced.
- What this means is that perceptions of Fed sensitivities to inflation prints may turn out to be unduly inflated.
- And by extension, a bullish USD theme will not enduringly overwhelm. Notably AUD bulls remain poised to out-perform.
