Three Take-Aways

1) Hopes of a truce that could re-open the Straits of Hormuz emerged on reports of "final stages" of US-Iran talks, dragging Oil, UST yields and USD lower while lifting equities.

2) While mostly unfettered by embedded doubts (given past TACO head fakes), hawkish FOMC Minutes and disappointing Nvidia guidance, caution around optimism

3) Bank Indonesia's 50bp hike ups the ante to tackle unremitting rupiah pressures. But this may only buy interim relief (extended by overnight "risk on"), not enduring reversals.

MACRO THEME: "Final Stages" (of Conflict)?

- Markets were in a buoyant mood as US and Saudi allusion to the "final stages" of US-Iran talks inspired hopes of (and bets on) an end to the conflict.

- Accordingly, oil fell emphatically (from above $110 to below $105), dragging yields (6-8bp) and USD down (USTs bull flattened) while equities were lifted (S&P500: +1.1%).

- What's more, accompanying reports of some vessels making safe passage through the Straits of Hormuz leaned into optimism about a truce emerging.

- Nonetheless, follow-through "risk on", for all purposes, appeared to be challenged. And not just because of disappointing Nvidia outlook.

Final ...

- The upshot is the slew of de-sensitizing track record of false dawns over the last 12 weeks of this conflict warrants a healthy dose of skepticism about just how "final".

- Especially given the multitude of hurdles and misaligned interests of, and incentives for, the primary actors (US, Israel and Iran) involved.

- From Israel's on-going, if not escalating, attacks on Lebanon to the gaping chasm on Iran's nuclear ambitions sticking points abound. Trump's threats of "big hit" if Iran did not "get smart" and Iran warning of retaliatory response (to any US attacks) "beyond Middle East" further undermine confidence around enduring good faith truce.

... Or Staged?

- The outright cynical may arguably be inclined to allege this optimism is staged.

- Specifically, viewing these positive headlines as another iteration of (one-sided) "TACO" to alleviate the pain from surging UST yields.

- Point being, previous episodes of "TACO" coinciding with 10Y UST yields testing 4.5% – whether merely spurious correlation or a consequential trigger – is grounds for reasonable doubt given UST yields were dangerously flirting with 4.7% when the headlines emerged.

Optimism or Opportunism

- Given such doubts, it is reasonable to suggest that some elements of "risk on" from the Iran conflict relief may merely be opportunism dressed up as optimism.

- And the significance of this is not predictive (positioning for binary bets), but rather protective (hedged for two-way volatility).

- That's to say, whilst remaining agnostic to whether or not a truce/deal is reached, there is a case to be made to protect against negative volatility. (if low-conviction, opportunistic bets turn).

FOMC Hawks a Latent Risk

- Especially given that the hawkish bent in the FOMC Minutes, where "many" (beyond just the three of the four dissenters) participants preferred to relinquish an easing bias.

- Admittedly, this has been mostly shrugged off for now amid the relief of "final stage" US-Iran talks that averts imminent attacks.

- But, if markets are caught wrong-footed by US/Israel-Iran military escalation, the risk is asymmetric bearish UST dynamics, which abruptly amplifies upside pressures on yields. Accompanying USD strength may further threaten adverse "risk off" dynamics.

The Oil Rub

- What's more, even in the optimistic case of a US-Iran truce, the physical realities of supply shock relief may fall short of the paper optimism. Admittedly, the headlines are likely to inspire an exuberant risk reflex, with oil prices correcting sharply lower, UST (and USD) follow suit and hawkish policy risks are diminished.

- But the reality of more prolonged production gaps and significant delivery lags colliding with depleted inventories may be consistent with protracted, albeit uneven, pain.

- Notably, low-income, "twin deficit" Asia economies may be disproportionately disadvantaged in terms of a restoration of energy flows. With attendant under-performance in persist in the more compromised AXJ, entrenching divergence in regional currencies.

Bank Indonesia's Upsized Hike May Not Upend Rupiah Pressures

- Speaking if which, the 50bp hike by Bank Indonesia (BI) is plainly aimed at stabilizing the rupiah, that has come under significant pressures since the "Middle East" crisis.

- To be sure, upsized hike complementing emphatic (FX and bond) intervention and a slew of (FX) regulatory measures, underpin prospects for rupiah backstop.

- But even with these coordinated efforts, rupiah depreciation pressures may only derive temporarily relief, not enduring and sustained reversal (consistent with reversion).

- Point being, the neither the element of surprise nor the amplitude of BI's outsized rate hike are a panacea for rupiah travails.
