Three Take-Aways

1) Oil prices continued to decline on reports of US-Iran negotiations going well but the sustainability of the recent pullback remains uncertain as key details are not finalised.

2) INR's near-term stabilisation is due to RBI's commitment to intervention, but prolonged FX reserves depletion amid elevated oil prices point to difficult recovery.

3) Singapore's April headline inflation held at 1.8% YoY, though this was flattered by one-off factors and does not suggest an absence of cost pass-through from the energy shock.

MACRO THEME: Deal Optimism

- Brent crude dropped to around US$96/barrel after Trump posted on Truth Social that US-Iran negotiations to extend their ceasefire and reopen the Strait of Hormuz were "proceeding nicely".

- Pakistan's military chief Asim Munir, the main go-between for US and Iran, also told China a deal is "close to being reached", reinforcing Trump's comments.

- US said Iran has agreed in principle to dispose of its highly enriched uranium, and Iran said while some progress has been reached, the deal with US "is not imminent".

- The current proposal involves extending the ceasefire for two months, with US lifting its naval blockade of Iranian ports and Iran reopening Hormuz in that time frame. Additionally, Iran has insisted the truce must cover "all fronts" including Lebanon, even as Israel continued to intensify strikes on Hezbollah in Lebanon.

- Given that key details on whether ships transiting the Hormuz Strait would be allowed free passage and how quickly Iranian funds will be unfrozen have yet to be finalised, along with reports of US military striking Iranian boats and missile launch sites this morning, the sustainability of the recent pullback in oil prices remains uncertain.

Iran's Firm Control of Hormuz

- Meanwhile, Iran has continued to stick to its earlier position that it must be able to manage maritime traffic through Hormuz, intending to charge vessels transiting the Strait a fee for "navigation services", reframing what had previously been described as tolls.

- The distinction is largely in name and the need from revenue understandably comes on the back the destruction of much of its military infrastructure and the broader damage from the conflict. Additionally, it would formalise Iran's control over Hormuz from it being a temporary leverage point.

- In the unlikely event of such a system being included in the deal, overall costs could rise further on a higher risk premium being priced into the region's energy supply, reinforcing our earlier view that oil prices are unlikely to quickly revert to pre US-Iran conflict levels.

FX (DXY: -0.3%)

- USD/JPY remains buoyed above mid-158 while EUR failed to sustain above mid-1.16.

India: Rupee Steadies as Authorities Step Up Defence

- The INR rebounded yesterday after RBI Governor struck an unusual direct tone in an interview, suggesting the rupee may be undervalued following its recent slide.

- He reiterated that the RBI holds around US$700b in reserves and would take all necessary steps to ensure orderly price discovery in the forex market.

- RBI has already stepped up intervention materially, with reports of it selling $2-3b last Thursday, up from a previous daily average of around $1bn. At this pace, reserve drawdown is manageable in the near term, but a prolonged defence would test the RBI's appetite as oil prices remain elevated and current account pressures persist.

Singapore April CPI: Headline Holds, Signal Unclear

- April headline inflation print held at 1.8% YoY, broadly unchanged from March, as upside from private transport and accommodation cost was offset by a pullback in services inflation.

- The print was distorted by administrative measures and one-off promotional campaigns rather than a lack of cost pass through from supply chain disruptions.

- The decline in services inflation (0.6%-pt) was almost entirely driven by a smaller increase in health insurance cost (0.4%-pt) and lower telecommunication services prices (0.2%-pt). A smaller increase in insurance costs reflected new regulations on Integrated Shield Plan riders effective 1 April that resulted in lower insurance premiums. A decrease in prices for Telecommunications services is likely due to promotional pricing for internet related services. With no consolidation in sight following failed takeover attempts, this effect is likely to persist.

- Excluding these factors, Services inflation would have accelerated by 0.2% MoM, pointing to a firmer inflation picture, with gains mainly driven by package holidays (+0.07%-pt) and Inpatient Services (+0.04%-pt).

- On this note, even overall headline inflation (-0.3% MoM) momentum was obscured by cost of living measures, mainly dampened by Services & Conservancy Charges (S&CC) rebates (-0.7%-pt).

- Private transport and Food inflation contributed 0.2%-pt and 0.04%-pt to the MoM print respectively underscoring energy price pressures while healthcare costs edge higher contributed 0.2%-pt despite measures to lower premiums.

- Taken together with its Q1 GDP upside surprise driven by AI-related capital spending demand, further policy tightening by the MAS may be marginally deferred by these favourable inflation optics, rather than derailed by a dismissal of inflation concerns.

- Nevertheless, SGD remains better positioned compared to regional peers and is likely to remain firm amid safe haven flows.
