Three Take-Aways

1) US headline CPI accelerated to 4.2% in May, though a softer than expected core inflation print aids the case for a Fed rate hold.

2) Renewed US-Iran attacks and Iran declaring closure of Hormuz sent oil prices and UST yields soaring. Risk sentiments sour. EM-Asia FX set to buckle.

3) The ECB is likely to hike rates today as an extended US-Iran conflict triggers worries on further upside risks to inflation with recent CPI prints revealing substantial price pressures. EUR may not get a huge lift as ECB may refrain from hiking cycle narrative.

MACRO THEME: Not Passing Though?

- US Headline CPI came in as expected at 4.2% in May rising from 3.8% in April while the increase in core inflation was rather muted at 2.9% for May, marginally higher than the 2.8% print in April.

- While energy prices drove the headline CPI surge, the other components in the basket were rather mixed with rental, medical and recreation costs rising while car insurance and furniture prices slipped.

- This CPI print is likely to aid the narrative for the Fed to stay on hold and look through this bout of inflationary pressures especially with doubts about the resilience of consumer demand creeping in from the lack of broader cost passthrough.

- The mild drop in UST yields and moderate recovery in risks sentiments after the release of the CPI print was easily reversed on renewed US-Iran attacks. US equities fell across the board with the Nasdaq leading losses with a 2% decline.

Cease Traffic, Not Fire

- US President Trump announced further strikes on Iran overnight for delaying talks, saying that "We're going to be attacking them, attacking them very hard". He also said that we were really close to a deal but they keep tapping us along.

- Even though US central command has retained the framing of self defense strikes, these incessant attacks represent a sharp escalation in the conflict.

- Nonetheless, the advance declaration of attacks and "self defense" strikes imply that markets will be wary of US central command calling an "end" to those strikes.

- In fact, after launching these attacks, Trump has just told the media this morning that the bombing will stop shortly but will bomb Iran again tomorrow if they do not sign an agreement.

- Nonetheless, in response, Iran has just announced that Hormuz is shut for all and any ship passing by will be targeted. IRGC Navy also said that two vessels attempting passage were struck.

- Crucially, even as Iranian radar sites were hit in recent days, the renewed tensions dented the tinge of optimism from tankers attempting transit by going dark. On balance, it remains tough to envisage Iran being bombed into submission.

(US) PPI Final Demand MoM (May)		0.7%	1.4%

- While markets tune into weakened Iran infrastructure and military amid the bombing, US weapons stockpile may inevitably also draw scrutiny on financing and debt woes.

Post China CPI: Subdued Demand, Margin Woes

- China's latest inflation prints were broadly in line with market expectations. CPI was unchanged from the previous month, holding steady at 1.2% YoY in May. This suggests that pass-through from upstream cost pressures remains limited, reflecting still-subdued domestic demand. While petroleum prices accelerated to 19.3% YoY, adding 0.56ppt to headline inflation, the impact was largely offset by softer food and core inflation, which eased to -1.7% and 1.1% YoY, respectively.

- Rather than headline inflation itself, we are more concerned about the increasing margin compression faced by Chinese manufacturers.

- Under the PPI category, producer goods prices rose 5.2% YoY in May, driven by elevated mining and raw materials prices, while consumer goods prices remained in deflation at -0.8% YoY.

- In our view, this divergence highlights the persistent challenge for manufacturers in passing higher input costs downstream, leaving margins under continued pressure.

- With uncertainty still surrounding the stalemate in US-Iran peace talks, we expect Chinese policymakers to step up support for the manufacturing sector. Potential relief measures could include targeted fiscal subsidies and preferential policy loans, as cost pressures on manufacturers continue to build.

ECB: Hike and See?

- Markets are almost fully pricing in a 25bp rate hike at the upcoming meeting. Hawkish signals have emerged from various ECB officials with one of the latest being Belgium Governor Wunsch who signal his preference for a quarter-point increase, as a confirmation of a US-Iran peace deal makes it less easy to hike but probably still a case for hiking.

- The more important reminder is perhaps his caveat that this increase does not necessarily usher in a series of rate hikes.

- To be clear, this is not a pre-emptive hike as price pressures were evident in the May CPI print with core inflation rising to 2.5% YoY as services inflation accelerated to an unwelcoming 3.5% YoY. Producer prices also show an accelerating momentum growing at 0.9% MoM in April excluding energy.

- At this juncture, with growth indicators not revealing excessive stresses from the US-Iran conflict, the ECB is likely to tighten policy while signalling their vigilance on downside growth risks as well. Consequently, EUR bulls may find little gains from this meeting especially with policy makers likely to stay cautious rather than aggressive on rate hikes.
