Three Take-Aways

1) Tech-led rebound in US equities are arguably underpinned by softer oil and yields off the highs. But risk appetite remains selective, if not opportunistic amid wider uncertainties.

2) At the ECB's annual Sintra forum President Lagarde left open the question of further tightening despite the abating Middle East crisis and assessment of diminished vulnerabilities to shocks.

3) AXJ remain on the backfoot, lagging the gains that softer oils should otherwise suggest. JPY intervention risks are elevated as 162 is tested.

MACRO THEME: Risk Cheques Markets Can't Cash

- Abating Middle East conflict risks (as the US-Iran truce resumes) with softer oil in tow, UST yields off recent highs and equities rebounding would ordinarily suggest favourable risk environment. But markets are arguably cautious. And justifiably so, given elevated, if not unprecedented, uncertainties that prevail in the background.

- An impending Fed framework change conspiring with exceptional US geo-political adventurism amid transformational AI imposing on capital markets warn of corners with compromised visibility and perhaps untold dangers that lurk. And so, the usual risk markers are writing cheques that markets just cannot cash – just ask languishing Asian currencies that defy sharply softer oil.

Appetite for, Not Absence of, Risks

- After a sharp sell-off in equities earlier there are signs of opportunistic buying that have emerged heading into mid-year and the summer break. But this measured appetite for some risk exposure is not to be mistaken for a complete disregard for underlying risks.

- Admittedly, US equities (S&P500 up 1.2%) have staged a tech-led (Nasdaq rallying 2.1%) rebound to snap 7 consecutive sessions of losses. Nonetheless, Nasdaq (S&P500) is still down >4% (nearly-2%) for the month, suggesting that risk-taking at this juncture is calculated, not cavalier.

Indigestion Threat

- Especially in the context of Space X listing exuberance (up >20% since listing), in stark contrast to (and at the cost of) under-performance elsewhere on Nasdaq. Which warns that post-Space X markets may be acutely cognizant of potential indigestion from outsized issuances – both in equity and bond markets – in the foreseeable pipeline. Point being, even if assumptions of flushed global liquidity hold in broad terms, cannibalistic competition for capital as well as starker winner-loser outcomes haunt.

Uneven (Capital) Flows

- For one, the distribution of liquidity may be highly uneven – with investment inclinations (and attendant capital allocation) that heavily favour some sectors/economies at the cost of others.

- Crucially, assumptions of agnostic circular flow of capital are challenged as liquidity pools into tighter loops that accentuate some parts while depriving the other.

- What this does, is amplify pro-cyclical moves in equities (as exemplified by outsized volatiles in Kospi) and exacerbate divergent performance. And inherently, this ends up merely raising latent volatility, rather than "all boats".

Amid Rising Costs & Bars

- What's more, UST yields are more elevated led by the front-end, despite coming off the highs.

- Consequently, the cost of capital from both a (wholesale) funding and market credit perspective are considerably more restrictive. In turn, this threatens to dampen excessive optimism asset markets, albeit very unevenly, with AI/Tech-driven issuances exuberating divergences.

ECB: Sintra Predicaments

- Meanwhile at the ECB's annual central banking forum (Sintra, Portugal), ECB President Lagarde posed the persistent policy predicament. Notably, citing tensions between:

o Welcome abatement of Middle East risks and diminished EZ vulnerabilities to shocks on one hand.

o But the problematic situation of "far from assured" peace and increased incidences of shocks on the other.

- The upshot is that the ECB's predicament might be having to do so much that it imperils growth, but not enough to boost the EUR (trying to regain traction above 1.14).

Acute & Asymmetric AXJ Pain

- Arguably, AXJ pain has been far more acute (outside of CNH), and to some degree, persistent. To be sure, with 85-90% of energy exports transiting the Straits of Hormuz, the initial hit on AXJ from the US/Israel Iran war was not completely unexpected.

- But remarkably, is that the sharp drop in crude prices since the truce has not aided with the corresponding recovery in AXJ that might have been otherwise expected. This speaks to asymmetric risk reversal (to oil, fiscal dent) and lingering threats (unevenly compromised energy delivery, geo-political, policy) hidden in plain sight.

JPY Intervention risks

- Similarly, JPY, which suffered the brunt of surging oil prices, has not enjoyed ant relief from the subsequent pullback in crude. In fact, there is an argument for hawkish Fed perceptions undermining BoJ hikes to re-instill "carry trades" that drag JPY.

- Nonetheless, MoF vigilance against leaving speculative bearish JPY bets warn of intervention risks afoot as 162 breaks (as this is written).

- Ultimately, JPY is still a "BoJ problem with a Fed solution" (that awaits a dovish Fed turn). But in the interim, marginal JPY bears best be braced for intervention to extract a price.

Yields (2Y: +1.4bp; 10Y: +0.5bp; 30Y: -0.1bp)
