Three Take-Aways

1) Attacks on Riyadh reflects relentless conflict risks in the Middle East with diminished supplies to Europe to keep global oil prices elevated.

2) While diplomatic channels are being deployed between US and Iran, conditions to end the war from Iran may not be palatable to both sides.

3) Asia looks for progress in talks between Scott Bessent and He Lifeng as signals before Trump-Xi summit. Vietnam's FTSE upgrade effective today a key milestone though may not be a sharp VND windfall.

MACRO THEME: Hopes Dimmed?

- Even as optimists are focused on diplomatic efforts, the much more salient risk continues to be the relentless conflict in the Middle East.

- For one, Saudi Arabia's capital, Riyadh faced missile attacks by the Houthi forces over the weekend. Airport fuel depot was hit and some oil operations in the south said to be halted.

- With Saudi Aramco declaring force majeure to European buyers, the lack of supplies resulted in Dated Brent crude prices, which is benchmark for real-world barrels in Europe testing US$130 last week.

- Rising conflicts risks have also resulted in the US State Department advising Americans to reconsider travel to the Middle East.

No Workaround?

- Meanwhile, Qatari authorities have refuted the framing by US Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent that the Strait of Hormuz will be worthless in two years.

- Qatar is not currently planning new pipelines to bypass Hormuz based on commercial and technical reasons which contrast with UAE and Saudi Arabia efforts to develop workarounds around the Strait of Hormuz. Officials also stated that there are goods beyond oil and gas which are also transported through the Strait of Hormuz.

- As for now, Qatar said that they are only exporting a very small amount of LNG through the Strait which in turn reflects the elevated buoyancy of gas prices.

Demands or Talks?

- Qatar also continues to be the mediator in the conflict with Iran said to have sent conditions to Washington with the aim of ending the war. That said, it is difficult to envisage that these conditions are palatable to the US with the more likely possibility being outright rejection at worst or further refinements if mediators can keep tensions from escalating.

- Qatar is said to be aiming to revive talks with exchange of proposals to bridge differences. Given the previous experience of negotiations, it is hard to see much softening of Iranian stance. This is especially so given that Houthi's recent advancements increased leverage for Iran.

- While the possibility of Trump meeting Iranian President Masoud Pezeshkian this week in New York may be restraining the oil price surge this morning, decision making is far from being driven by the Iranian president with various factions unlikely to align without significant US concessions.

Global Caution

- In Europe, French fiscal outlook returned to the spotlight with ratings agencies Scope ratings cutting the credit score while Morningstar DBRS revising its outlook at negative.

- French President Macron also said that he will convene a G7 meeting in the coming weeks to discuss a potential release from the oil-product stockpiles which yet again highlights the downstream concerns and its consequent impact on economic activity.

- In Asia, the BoJ hiked rates in a 7-2 decision last Friday and the lack of a unanimous decision was interpreted as a dovish outcome as dissenters were concerned about economic conditions.

- Furthermore, with Governor Ueda opting for a balanced approach in his press conference, JPY continued to weaken. That said, a rate check which is seen as a prelude to intervention saw the JPY recover most of its post-BoJ losses.

- Trump-Xi summit is in focus this week with Bessent-He Lifeng meetings observed for potential progress.

Vietnam's Upgrade: Medium-Term Boost, Not Near-Term Windfall

- Vietnam's FTSE upgrade which will be implemented from today marks a significant structural milestone that should bolster the country's medium-term investment appeal, but expectations for an immediate market or FX windfall may be misplaced.

- The phased nature of FTSE GEIS inclusion, combined with foreign ownership headroom and persistent foreign equity outflows despite the earlier upgrade announcement, suggests that passive inflows are likely to be backloaded, uneven and potentially accompanied by bouts of volatility.

- While the VND has shown resilience in 2026, supported by FDI inflows, tourism receipts, rising FX reserves and favourable regional FX spillovers from KRW, JPY and CNH strength in recent months, these tailwinds appear largely cyclical rather than indicative of a sustained structural revision of equilibrium VND levels.

- As such, recent VND gains do not warrant outright bullish bets, particularly amid elevated inflation risks that could erode real returns and fuel credit growth concerns.

- Nonetheless, continued market reforms, infrastructure development, IFC related progress and deeper integration into global capital markets through the FTSE upgrade should gradually strengthen Vietnam's long-term investment and currency fundamentals.
