Three Take-Aways

1) Regional diplomacy eased oil prices, but unresolved shipping risks and low inventories leave markets vulnerable to renewed disruption.

2) AI spending commitments fuelled a tech stock rebound, but financing risks and investment returns remain under scrutiny.

3) The BoT could raise rates as elevated core inflation and THB weakness strengthen the case for normalisation, although an uneven recovery leaves the timing finely balanced.

MACRO THEME: Diplomacy Offers Oil Some Relief

- Senior officials from Saudi Arabia, Pakistan and Turkey met Iranian leaders in Tehran, keeping diplomatic channels open despite continued military threats from Washington. The talks offered some reassurance, but produced no confirmed settlement or immediate improvement in shipping security across the Strait of Hormuz.

- Iran's reported flexibility over the timetable for reopening the Strait of Hormuz suggests room for compromise. However, sequencing remains critical, with disagreements over sanctions, the US blockade and maritime access continuing to obstruct negotiations. Tehran also questioned Washington's commitment to diplomacy, tempering expectations of an imminent breakthrough.

- Renewed regional diplomacy helped push oil prices lower on Monday. Brent fell 0.8%, while WTI declined 1.5%.

- The pullback in oil prices looks more consistent with a partial unwind of geopolitical risk than a fundamental improvement in supply.

- However, continued attacks and depleted inventories leave energy prices vulnerable to renewed disruption. A sustained decline will require verifiable progress on shipping security and implementation of reciprocal measures, rather than diplomatic headlines alone.

AI Capex Momentum Supports Rebound in Tech Stocks

- AI and chip stocks rebounded as a series of corporate announcements reinforced expectations that the AI infrastructure spending cycle remains intact.

- Meta's planned US$95bn fundraising and SpaceX's US$40bn GPU-financing commitment underscore their determination to expand AI infrastructure. These commitments reinforce expectations of sustained chip and equipment procurement, despite investor concerns over dilution and investment returns.

- Anthropic's IPO filing reinforces the scale and persistence of AI infrastructure spending. The company disclosed over US$500bn on future compute and infrastructure. The expanding commitment pipeline supports expectations of sustained demand for chips, cloud capacity and data-centre infrastructure.

- Meanwhile, reports of a KRW50trn–60trn shareholder-return package from SK hynix boosted investor sentiment, although the final amount remains unconfirmed.

- However, Elon Musk's warning of widespread neocloud consolidation highlights persistent concerns over financing access, excessive leverage and the sustainability of smaller operators.

- The rebound reflects greater confidence in the durability of AI capex. However, the recent selloff has sharpened investors' focus on whether rising spending on AI can deliver returns that justify the associated financing and execution risks.

Fiscal Fears Trigger Brazil Selloff

- Brazilian assets sold off sharply as investors unwound bets on tighter spending controls and lower borrowing costs following the election result. The Ibovespa plunged 13.9%, triggering a trading halt, while the Brazilian real suffered a steep depreciation.

- Sovereign debt also weakened, with five-year credit-default swaps widening to 144bp from 120bp. The Treasury cancelled two scheduled bond auctions amid heightened volatility.

- The simultaneous equity, currency and bond sell-off signals a sharp repricing of fiscal credibility. A sustained recovery will likely require clearer spending discipline and a credible debt-stabilisation framework.

Yields (2Y: +3.5bp; 10Y: -0.7bp; 30Y: -1.9bp)*

FX (DXY: +0.1%)*

BoT Watch: The Normalisation Debate

- The BoT enters the upcoming meeting in a relatively unique position, retaining scope to contemplate a rate hike as part of policy normalization.

- With the policy rate still at 1.00%, monetary settings remain accommodative by historical standards.

- Meanwhile, growth indicators spanning production, investment and exports continue to point to a gradual recovery though still falling short of potential growth, while tourism remains a notable soft spot.

- Inflation also remains elevated within the BoT's target range.

- While there is no urgent need to tighten policy, neither can a rate hike be ruled out, particularly with core inflation at 1.5% YoY, well above its 2013-19 average of 0.9%.

- Furthermore, the THB has depreciated by around 2.2% since the previous meeting, increasing imported inflation risks and marginally strengthening the case for pre-emptive action.

- All in, we envisage a possible rate hike by the BoT at the upcoming meeting.

- In our view, the debate is less about whether conditions justify higher rates and more about timing.

- Policymakers face a subjective decision weighing the benefits of acting against inflation and THB weakness now versus preserving policy ammunition until the recovery becomes more firmly entrenched.
