Market Commentary

Equities were relatively flat during Q3 as investors weighed rising inflation concerns driven by higher energy prices. Despite several attempts to agree a ceasefire, negotiations between the US and Iran have yet to produce a meaningful breakthrough. Despite the higher energy prices which consumers are now feeling at the pump, economic data continues to indicate a resilient economy, allowing some central banks to raise interest rates in an effort to combat inflation. The Bank of England has so far held off but at least one hike is looking likely before the end of the year. Bond yields continued to rise during the quarter and we have selectively increased exposure as risk-adjusted return prospects look attractive. While we remain optimistic about the long-term potential of artificial intelligence, we believe the greatest beneficiaries are likely to be companies that successfully deploy the technology rather than those developing it. We continue to find more attractive valuations outside of the US and remain underweight with our positioning.
