

Continue

Beauty YouTuber James Charles had his Twitter account hacked by cyberbullies who threatened to leak a nude photo he had taken. In response, Charles took control of his account back and shared the photo himself, captioning it "Hii I got my account back just in case I ever get hacked again, here's the ONLY nude I've ever taken! Can't threaten me with it now get a life." The selfie, which shows Charles' bare backside, quickly became a meme on Twitter. This incident comes after fellow YouTuber Shawn Dawson was also targeted by the same hate group, and James Charles isn't the first celebrity to release a nude selfie after being blackmailed online. James Charles, a prominent social media influencer and makeup artist, has become embroiled in controversy once again, this time over a leaked video that appears to show him engaging in explicit acts with another person. The video, which is reportedly five minutes long, was first shared on Telegram and subsequently circulated on various platforms, leading to James trending online. While some have taken to defending James, others have criticized his actions and the subsequent sharing of clips from the video. This latest scandal follows a previous one in 2021, in which James faced allegations of grooming a minor. In response to these allegations, James acknowledged making a mistake and expressed regret over his actions.