Investor's Guide to Oil and Gas Investing

Do you ever wonder how investors stay successful in long-term investing in oil and gas? One of the many tools educated investors use to help achieve long-term profitability is understanding their risk to reward and how to mitigate those risks while maximizing their reward. Here is an inside look at maximizing your investment dollars by understanding the risk and how to mitigate those potential risks in the oil and gas world.

Although Oil & Gas Exploration is inherently a high-risk investment; We at Bass Energy Exploration take multiple measures to mitigate that risk. Here are some of those measures:

- 1.) Diversification: Rather than invest in one well, we spread the investment dollars over three to six wells, greatly reducing the impact of a failed well. The idea of being that good wells will make up for the bad.
- 2) Proven Production: Although wildcatting and exploratory drilling are viable options for successfully developing your investment in the oil & gas business, participants can expect to sustain enormous losses before seeing a return. For this reason, Bass Energy has chosen to confine its exploration to infield development in proven areas that were previously developed in the late 90s and 80s with new and prevalent technology of our time.
- 3) Methodology: By confining exploration to infield development and implementing a method for project selection (which locates our site to proven undeveloped fields), it all but assures us of projects that will produce.
- 4) The above-mentioned measures, along with many others such as highly experienced crews, lower development cost, minimal monthly operating expenses, and implementation of third-party evaluators, give Bass Energy Exploration and its partners the highest possibility of a successful and profitable project.

We hope you choose to become a valued member of the Bass Energy Exploration group of diversified partners. We appreciate every investor and are greatly valued and informed on every decision made to maximize all partner benefits!

With many thanks and abundant blessing,

Steve Bass
