

Fix the City Budget

The Problem

San Francisco is headed toward an over \$1 billion budget deficit. If more federal and state funding cuts materialize and/or a recession hits, the problem could get worse. This is not a short-term issue and it will not fix itself.

Despite modest population decline, the City’s budget has continued to grow. Today, SF:

- Has a City budget that has grown to roughly \$16 billion despite our population declining since 2020.
- Has more public employees per capita than major cities like New York City and Los Angeles.
- Spends more than peer city-counties, some U.S. states, and even entire countries on city services.
- Increasing taxes won't fix the problem - San Francisco has some of the highest taxes in the Bay Area, which has already driven away or caused major employers to downsize their city presence like Charles Schwab, Stripe, and McKesson.

The bottom line is clear: San Francisco does not have a revenue problem. It has a spending problem.

City Spending outpaces City Revenue

Why This Is Happening

- Non-profit spending: City spends ~\$1.6 billion on non-profits. Scandals and audits have revealed weak oversight, misuse of funds, and straight up fraud.
- Wasteful and irresponsible city spending: The City fails to effectively track spending, with examples including persistent homelessness despite increased funding and raiding a small-business healthcare fund to plug budget gaps.

What Happens If We Don't Act

Even with progress made by last year's City budget, San Francisco remains on an unsustainable path. Continued overspending risks:

- Severe fiscal stress that reduces quality of life. Back in 2024, credit rating firms Moody's and Standards and Poor lowered SF's credit rating due to concerns over our deficit.
- Painful cuts to services such as our parks, libraries, and police.

What We're Calling For: The Three Do Nots

San Francisco must close its budget gap responsibly by following these three clear principles:

1. Do not use reserve funds. Reserves are for emergencies like recessions and not for poor planning.
2. Do not use one-time fixes and short cuts. Accounting gimmicks won't solve a structural deficit.
3. Do not increase taxes. The problem is spending, not revenue.

What You Can Do

The Bottom Line

San Francisco is approaching a fiscal cliff. We still have time to change course but only if we act decisively. Do not use reserve funds. Do not use one-time fixes/short cuts. Do not increase taxes. Just responsible budgeting and real reform now.
