

Pop-up or Portable Padel Courts

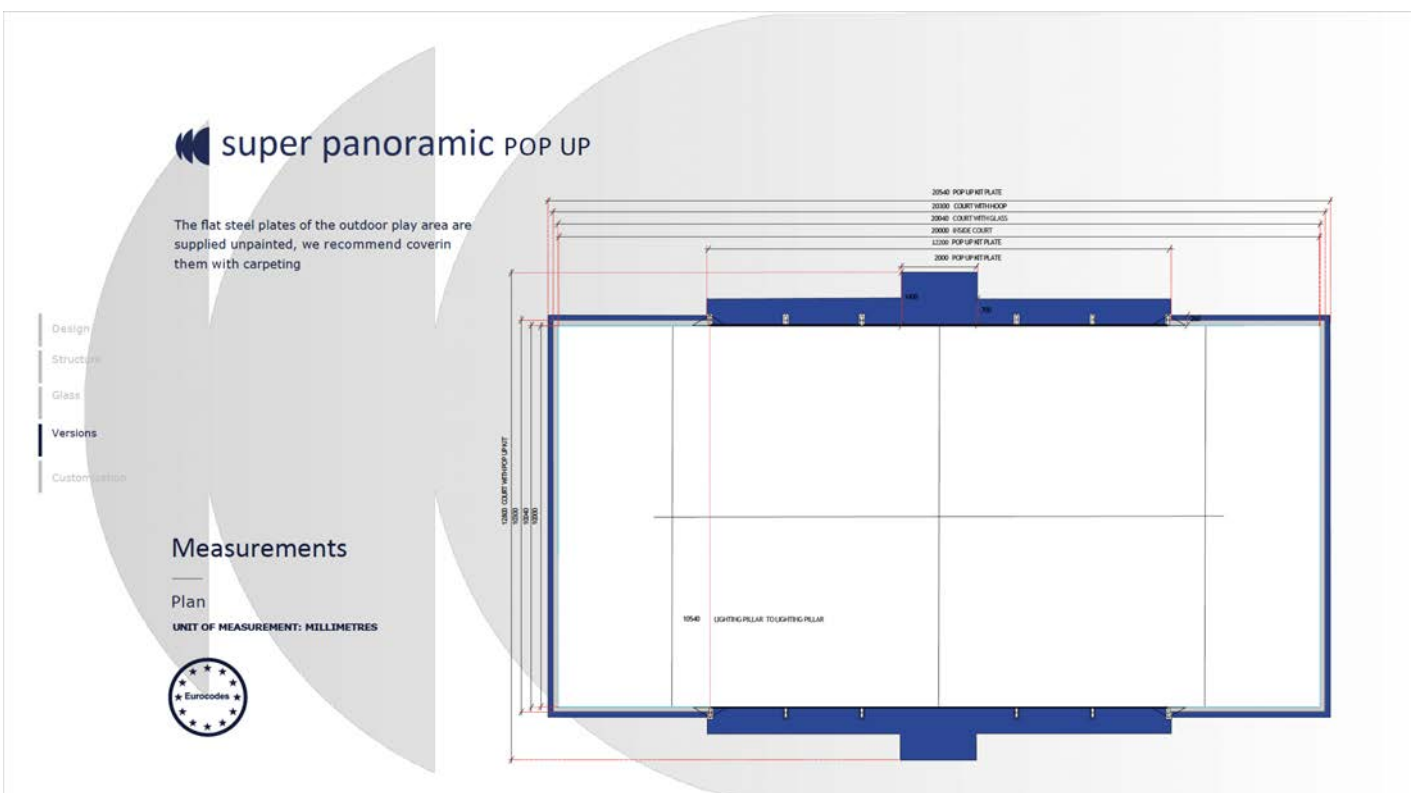

With conventional foundation costs continuing to rise in the UK, there is increasing demand for pop-up or temporary courts that can sit on existing hard surfaces without the need for costly concrete ring beams.

All of our Padel Plus Jubo models are available as pop-up versions. The court frames are similar but they can be installed on suitable surfaces without being tied to conventional ring beams. Drainage remains vital and there's no point at all in installing a pop-up court on a surface that does not freely drain. Flatness of the surface, and its ability to drain, are the two main criteria in assessing a site's suitability.

Below | The key difference is the use of steel plates (see blue area in the diagram) that extend along the length of the court, centred around the court openings. These increase the surface area of the court frame in contact with the ground. Combined with the significant weight of the courts, these plates ensure stability despite not being tied to concrete foundations. Note it is also possible to bolt pop-up courts to the surface (in situations where a suitable base exists).

Key Points

- + Ideal for temporary installations (eg exhibitions, events, tournaments)
- + Ideal for sites where planning legislation might demand short-term or reversible use of a site
- + Ideal for sites where the ground under the court cannot be damaged
- + Ideal for clubs wanting to introduce padel to gauge interest without making an investment in ground works that may not be needed in the long-term
- + Courts can be easily moved and reinstalled elsewhere either on a temporary or permanent basis
- + Pop-up courts are typically £5500 more than the conventional version of the same model (on account of the additional design and materials that provide the stability in lieu of permanent foundations) but given the savings on ground works (typically £35-40k per court) they represent amazing value for money

Pop-up courts can provide the ideal solution when converting disused tennis courts either at a club or home. We have a number of these installations lined up for 2025 using the Super Panoramic Pop-up court which combines stunning visual appeal with technical performance and of course tremendous value for money.

The family is excited about the padel court. We're turning an under-used part of the garden into what I'm sure will be its beating heart."
