Neem Beej

Neem Beej is derived from Azadirachta indica, commonly known as Neem, a fast-growing evergreen tree belonging to the Meliaceae family. Native to India, it is widely found across tropical and subtropical regions. The tree has pinnate leaves, fragrant white flowers, and produces small, green-to-yellow fruits containing seeds known as Neem Beej. The seeds, along with the leaves, bark, and oil, are extensively used in Ayurvedic and traditional medicine. Neem thrives in a variety of soils, especially well-drained and sunny locations.

Medicinal Uses

Neem Beej is highly valued in Ayurveda for its antimicrobial, anti-inflammatory, and blood-purifying properties. The seeds are traditionally used to prepare Neem oil, which helps manage skin disorders, infections, and wounds. Neem Beej also supports liver function, aids in detoxification, and boosts immunity. Rich in bioactive compounds such as azadirachtin, nimbin, and flavonoids, it promotes overall wellness, maintains oral and dental health, and contributes to general vitality. Its therapeutic properties make it a cornerstone ingredient in herbal formulations for skin, immunity, and detoxification.
