

Nonessential Clauses and Phrases (Part One)

For each question, identify whether or not the underlined phrase needs commas and/or dashes surrounding it. (Y/N)

1. Anthony who won the race became the first one in our class to receive a trophy.
2. The cats sitting in the window are called Romulus and Remus.
3. Joe who is walking in from third base hits and fields well.
4. The player who is walking in from third base hits and fields well.
5. George Clooney himself is in attendance today.
6. Most people think Frankenstein is the name of a monster; it is actually however the name of the scientist who created the monster.
7. I will make sure to clean my room and make my bed from now on.
8. The main part of the long drive across the United States took about forty hours.
9. Even eighty years later people still remember the horrific events of World War 2.

10. From now on I will make sure to clean my room and make my bed.
11. Engineer William Barclay accepted responsibility for overseeing the project.
12. The fresco, Cleveland Industry, is a dynamic work that by capturing the energy, humanity, and collective achievement of the Cleveland workers celebrates all working men and women.
13. More importantly though we enjoyed working together.
14. In the mythology of the Tswana people of South Africa, the stars that make up the constellation Orion represent three pigs.
15. The author of the article Adam Allouche preached the moral system known as the “Gospel of the Force”.
16. The greatest adventurers in the world have long sought out the mythical city of Atlantis which is rumored to exist on an island fallen under the sea.