

I'm not a bot

spite n1. maliciousness involving the desire to harm another; venomous ill will2. an instance of such malice; grudge3. archaic something that induces vexation4. in spite of (preposition) in defiance of; regardless of; notwithstandingvb (tr) 5. to annoy in order to vent spite ===== spitefulness malevolence by virtue of being malicious or spiteful or nastybitchiness, cattiness, nastiness, spitefulnessmalice, maliciousness, spite, malice, venomous ill will, gall, animosity, rancour, pique, bitchiness, malignity ===== He was giving his art collection away for nothing, to spite them.
=====He went in spite of his father's orders, and he was very angry because she didn't listen to him anymore. She just did it to spite him, so he decided to leave home. ===== In spite of initial reluctance, he agreed to consult a doctor, driven by a sense of urgency rather than spite. The grappling-irons, once fixed, were designed to counteract the weight, reduced by the density of the liquid in which they were submerged. His success was assured; his victim drew nearer, despite their efforts to resist. Visitors from Barton Park were few and far between, due to the independence of Mrs. Comte de la Fere, who had remained a young man well into her sixties. Athos, once a warrior, now an old man, had become withdrawn, his spirit driven by love for his wife, yet again urging him to set sail on a voyage of discovery and adventure. ===== She soon married again to spite her ex-husband. To fill with spite means to offend or vex someone. Notwithstanding, she felt a sense of ill will towards him despite their disagreement. Ill-will refers to resentment or anger that lingers for years. A grudge is a persistent feeling of ill will. Darius spited at the Magi, trying to abolish not only their learning but also their language. To act with spite means to do something maliciously to hurt or annoy someone. Feeling malevolence can lead people to engage in harmful behavior. His comment really hurt him when she didn't invite him to her event. Vexation is a feeling of being annoyed or irritated. A spiteful remark can be very hurtful. He acted out of spite to get back at his rival, doing something deliberately to cause pain or annoyance. Posting comments was pure spite, showing no regard for others' feelings. Feeling hostility comes from a sense of enmity or ill will towards someone. There's a long history of animosity between the two families, with bitterness lingering over years. Despite their differences, they had no animosity towards each other. Deep-seated resentment can lead to persistent feelings of ill will. The dispute was settled without any rancor, showing that people can put aside grudges. A strong desire for revenge is a characteristic of malevolence. His apology couldn't hide his underlying malice. A spite house is a building constructed to annoy others, often by obstructing their view or access.Spite is not an inherently imperative noun, yet its verb form "to spite" can be utilized in imperative sentences, such as "Spite your foes." This abstract concept represents an idea or notion rather than a physical entity. In many cases, the preposition "out of" accompanies "spite," e.g., "out of spite." The conjunctions employed with "spite" are not specifically contingent on "spite"; rather, they are determined by sentence structure. The articles "a" and "the" are commonly utilized with "spite," depending on the context in which it is used.