213 Secret Cheap Routes to Europe in Business Class with Your Miles or Points – Some With Enough Seats to Take the Baseball Team

April 2025

Yes, mileage award seats for up to nine passengers do exist.

For a while now, many travelers have been frustrated trying to find available, cheap premium seats to Europe using miles. Most of the pricing we've seen lately is 250,000 to 500,000 miles round-trip, if not more.

But despite all the bad news, deals can exist—and we've found a fistful. In some cases, you can get nine seats for the price of one American, Delta, or United with FCF's research. More on that in a moment.

With some flexibility, Business Class awards at 60,000 miles each way have been found on 213 routes for up to nine seats on Air France and KLM through the airline's Flying Blue loyalty program.

You can easily use a points-to-miles transfer partner to get the miles via Amex, Capital One, Chase, and Citi.

SECRET ROUTES?

There are two kinds—don't tell anyone about them, okay? This is just between you and me.

Non-Stop Secret Routes: Most travelers aren't finding deals between the U.S. and Europe. But look at this: 10 days for Business Class seats from New York to Paris in July:

One-Connection Secret Routes: These work much like American's lucrative system, which offers better availability on routes with a connection than non-stops.

In other words, where there might NOT be availability of the cheapest Business Class seats between Houston and Paris non-stop, there is good, cheap seat availability from Houston to Ibiza—via that same Air France non-stop flight, just by adding Ibiza to the itinerary!

The trick is to know what routes offer cheap Business Class seats.

Let's take a look. Here is the August availability of one Business Class seat from Houston to Paris. Forget cheap 60,000-mile seats, they start at 144,000 in August each way:

The Maple Leaf Loophole to Asia: Transform Premium Economy Budgets into Business Class Luxury with Cash Tickets

April 2025

The Maple Leaf Loophole nets Business Class for little more than Premium Economy to Asia

Looking for lie-flat luxury to Asia without the typical $7,000–$12,000 price tag? The Maple Leaf Loophole (MLL) might be your golden ticket.

WHAT IS THE MAPLE LEAF LOOPHOLE?

It's simple: Instead of starting your long-haul international flight from a U.S. airport, you use a Canadian hub like Vancouver, Toronto, or Montreal. This adjustment can slash Business Class fares by up to 68%—often on the exact same airlines you'd fly from the U.S to your destinations.

These aren't award redemptions or tricky point transfers. We're talking about real, bookable cash fares. Add a cheap positioning flight to Canada and you're off to Asia in comfort—often for far less than you'd pay departing from the U.S.

WHAT'S A POSITIONING FLIGHT?

A positioning flight is a short domestic or international hop you book separately to get to the city where your long-haul flight deal begins—in this case, from a U.S. city to a Canadian one.

WHEN BUSINESS CLASS IS ONLY ~10% TO 20% MORE THAN PREMIUM ECONOMY SAN FRANCISCO-TOKYO EXAMPLE

Instead Of	Do This
Non-stop from San Francisco to Tokyo in Premium Economy for $2,935 (Japan Airlines)	Book Vancouver - Tokyo Non-stop Business Class for $3,196 (Japan Airlines) AND a separate positioning ticket from SFO to Vancouver
Cost Difference	Total: $3,249 vs. $2,935 = $260 more (10% increase)
Convenience Difference	Extra positioning flights
Benefit Difference:	Fly Business Class instead of Premium Economy

If you had to fly at least Business Class and no mileage awards are available and you're staring down the barrel of an $11,000 fare, I'd recommend going a day or two before to Canada and enjoy one of its Maple Leaf cities.

How I Scored (Now Hard-to-Get) Cheap First Class Caviar & Shower Flights On Emirates Using a Little-Known Waitlist Strategy

April 2025

Some award seats never show up online. Here's how to find 'em

If you are a bags-packed dream-trip opportunist, or a willing-to-upgrade-till-the-end maestro, fasten your seatbelt. I have a secret strategy that can open up discount award space for $27,000 tickets you won't be able to snag any other way.

WHAT'S A WAITLIST?

Waitlisting is where you're put on a list for seats that aren't currently available in the booking category you desire. Airlines have historically used waitlists as an insurance policy when they don't sell all their seats, in that excess inventory is released to those on the waitlist. In this case today, we'll examine Emirates' liberal release of their premium seats for discount miles redemption close to departure.

(Similar to Lufthansas's lucrative First Class close-in opportunity.)

NOT ALL WAITLISTS ARE CREATED EQUAL

When it comes to award waitlisting, there are good waitlists and bad ones.

Bad Waitlists: One bad example is United mileage upgrade waitlists, which seldom clear. One reason is because anyone can do it online, so everyone does.

Good Waitlists: Emirates is a great example of a good waitlist. Why? You can't do it online. And almost nobody knows about it. That means the waitlist line is relatively short so you're more likely to win the waitlist lottery. Many travelers (especially younger ones) refuse to speak to anyone over the phone. They actually do everything on their phone; they just don't use it to speak to anyone. This hang-up equals more opportunities for you.

HOW TO GET THE GOODS THAT NEVER MAKE IT TO THE MARKET SHELVES

With Emirates waitlisting, you not only get access to seats you wouldn't otherwise, but you essentially beat your travel competitors to the draw as they will never see these seats on the airline's website.

Think of it like a grocery store. When people go to the store and see no tomatoes there, they either give up and move on to the next thing on their shopping list — OR they ask a store employee if there are any tomatoes in the back. That's kind of like what waitlisting is – access to the stuff that never actually makes it to the shelf. It's like you're going straight from the warehouse to your cart.

There are many people who just keep checking seat availability online (the grocery store shelf) every day. And there are other people who tell the “back room guy” to notify them when a box comes in — bypassing the shelf and going straight to their basket.

We found this tasty one out back

WAITLISTING AWARDS WITH EMIRATES IS A MANUAL (OVER THE PHONE) TASK BUT NOTIFICATIONS ARE AUTOMATIC

Once you've waitlisted an award flight, you'll be emailed when a seat becomes available, before it's even displayed on the website. A secret seat, if you will. That's huge. There's a whole stash of inventory that never makes it to the market shelf, but you can still park your patootie on it.

THE TWO WAITLIST WINNERS

Somewhat similar to Lufthansa's close-in release of First Class seats, Emirates generally releases seats three days prior to departure. Moreover, I've noticed that the odds of them releasing the seats are 50% or better.

So who can benefit from this?

Winner #1: The Bags-Packed Opportunist

You always have your bags packed and ready at the door, so to speak, so you can pounce when that world-class First Class bucket-list opportunity comes knocking. Perhaps you're retired, a business owner who makes your own schedule, or maybe you're a digital nomad.

Either way, for you the opportunity is inevitable. It just comes down to when.

Winner #2: The Upgrader Till the End

You've already booked a ticket, but it could use improvement, either because:

A) It cost more than you wanted to pay (in miles or cash), and/or

B) It's in a lesser class of service than you want (say Premium Economy or Business, and/or

C) It's not on your ideal airline (has average seats or for whatever reason), and/or

D) It could be more convenient (number of stops, routing, airports, connection times, dates, etc.),

AND

E) You're open to upgrade opportunities after buying a ticket. (One of my favorite things to do.)

This happened to me while traveling through the Baltics. I was wandering around the area when something came up that required me to return home. My first thought was to book what was most convenient and that was a LOT Polish Airlines flight. But my first thought isn't always my best one.

Then I thought to myself, hmmm...

1. What's the best flight I could take home from the region? (Emirates was high on that list.)
2. Italy (one of my favorite countries) has an Emirates A380 flight from Milan back to the U.S.
3. I'm always down for Milan.
4. But there's seldom any discount award availability in First Class on Emirates.

ENTER EMIRATES WAITLIST

I made like a tortoise, and waitlisted all the flights Emirates would let me: three. In my experience, this is almost a total guarantee, as long as you're flexible on dates. What an awesome ending to a trip. I get to hang out in Milan for a few days on my way back to the U.S. from a three-week trip to the Balkans and Baltics, where I hit country #108.

I'd go so far as to say, why not always return from Milan on any European trip? If not starting there?

Seriously.

Tortoise: winner by a long neck

Lake Como, Florence, Venice, Verona, and even the Alps are all an easy train ride away if you've exhausted Milan and want to expand your horizons.

By the way, as my trip was winding down, if the Emirates First Class A380 from Milan didn't open-up, I could always just fly home from Vilnius, Lithuania, in Business Class on LOT Polish Airlines.

The Emirates team

This strategy is similar to FCF's Upgrade Two-Step Strategy.

HOW DOES EMIRATES WAITLISTING WORK?

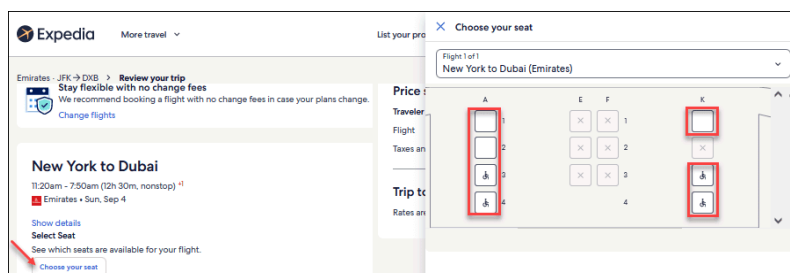

It's easy. All you have to do is pick up the phone, dial Emirates at 1-800-777-3999, and maybe wait on hold five minutes, if that. Put on your iPhone earbuds and enjoy some Barry Manilow or Beethoven, and make dinner or clear the dishes while you wait. Personally, I can be more productive while on hold with airlines than I am otherwise. A perfect distraction that allows me to focus. It's never been a big problem for me, and once you speak to a reservationist, they're happy to put you on the waitlist for up to three flights for your discount award. You just have to ask.

INCREASING YOUR ODDS

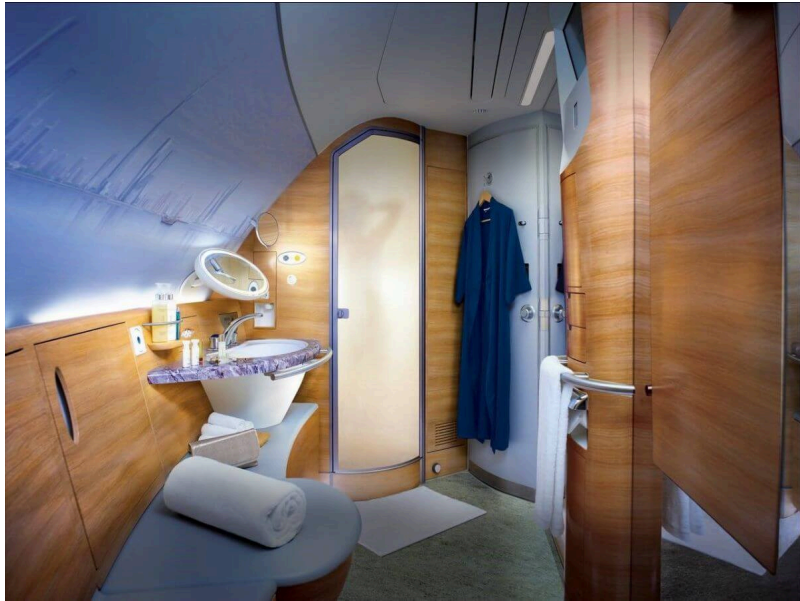

The more seats that are empty going in, the better the odds of your waitlist clearing, obviously.

How do you know what flights have the most empty seats?

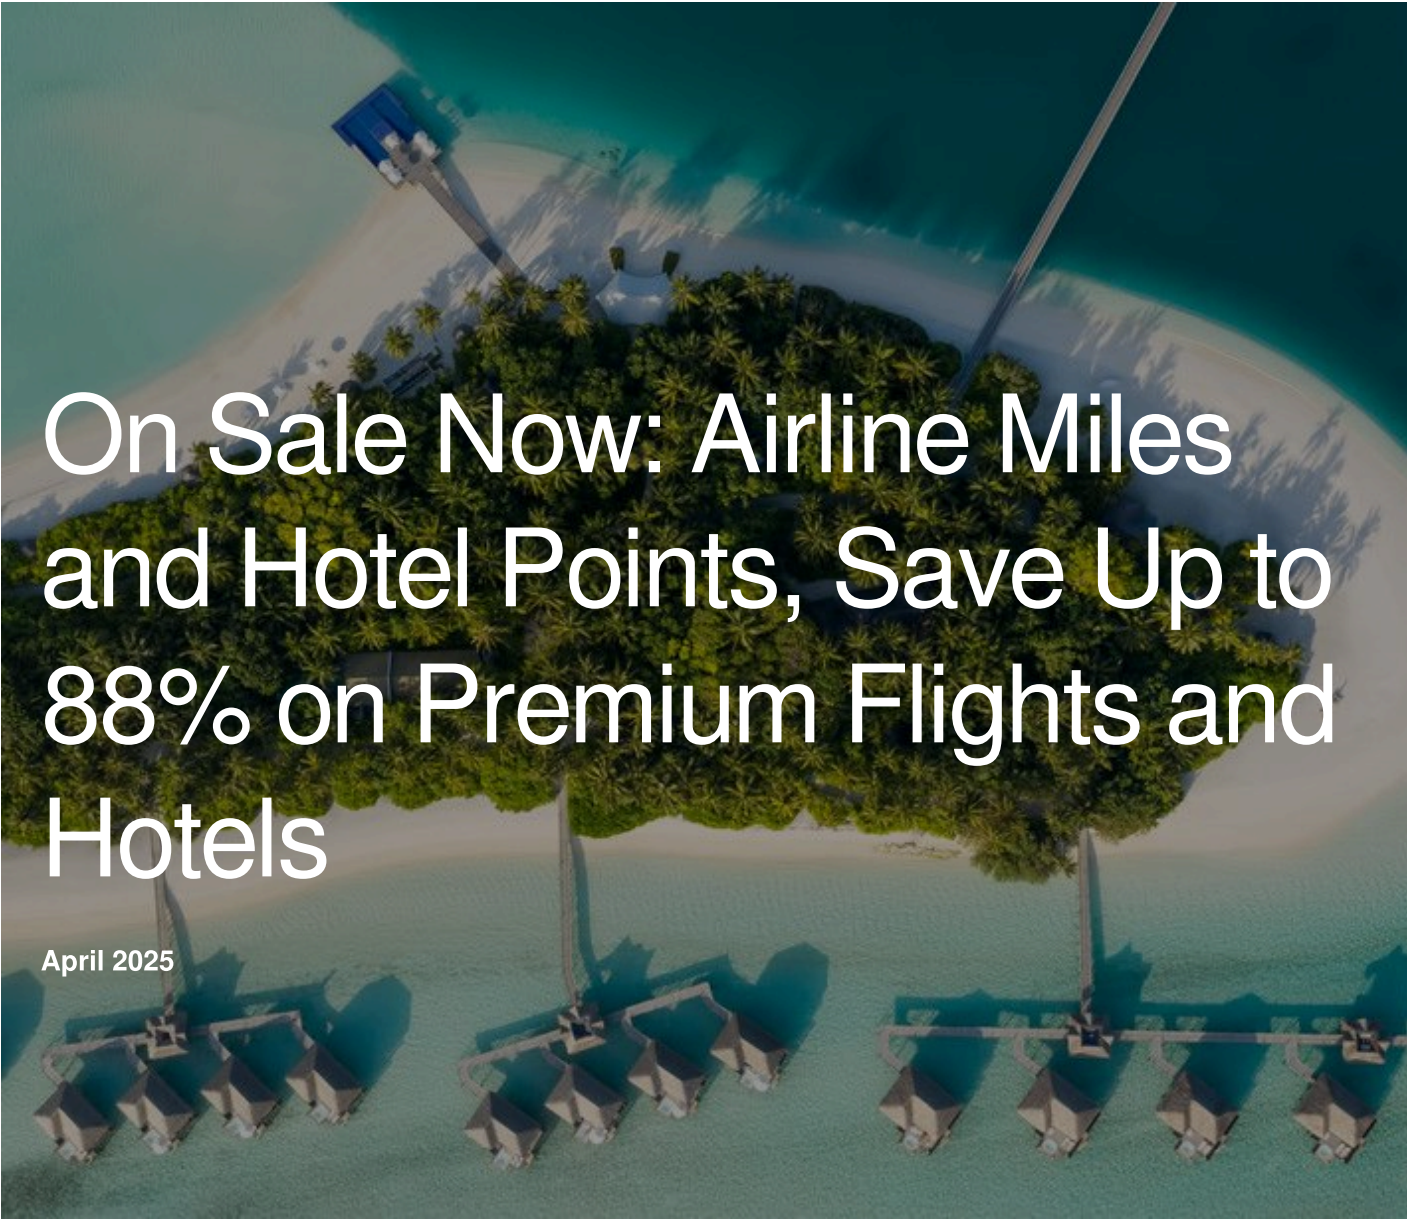

One way is to go to Expedia and do a search on the route and date you're considering. Then in the search results, click on the exact flight you're looking at. Then click on "choose your seat" (see below). Then view the number of empty seats. While not always 100% accurate, it's indicative, and if there are no empty seats, that's a bad sign for sure.

In general, I'd guess if you're a week out from departure, and see four or so seats open (is the case much of the time), waitlisting is worth pursuing. With less than two seats, your odds are slim.

Emirates shower flights are fun and memorable.
