Twelve sheets, sorted from big simple shapes to fine detailed patterns. Print the few that fit your child today.

Big shapes, bold lines

Wide open areas and thick outlines.
A good place to start.
3 sheets

A little more detail

Smaller spaces and a few more pieces to work through.
5 sheets

Lots of small spaces

Fine detail that takes a while to fill in.
Grown-ups tend to like these too.

Let them choose

Lay out two or three sheets and let your child pick. Choosing is worth practicing on its own.

Color alongside them

Take a sheet yourself and work next to them. Plenty of kids join in when nobody is watching.

Materials matter as much as the picture

If your child pushes a crayon away, the texture may be the problem. Offer a different tool before you offer a different sheet.

Staying inside the lines is not the point

Scribbling, filling one small patch, or flipping the sheet over to draw their own alpaca all count.

Keep a few printed and nearby

Some kids come back to coloring when they want something quiet and predictable.

The sign is blank on purpose. Your child can write their name on it, or draw something that belongs to them.

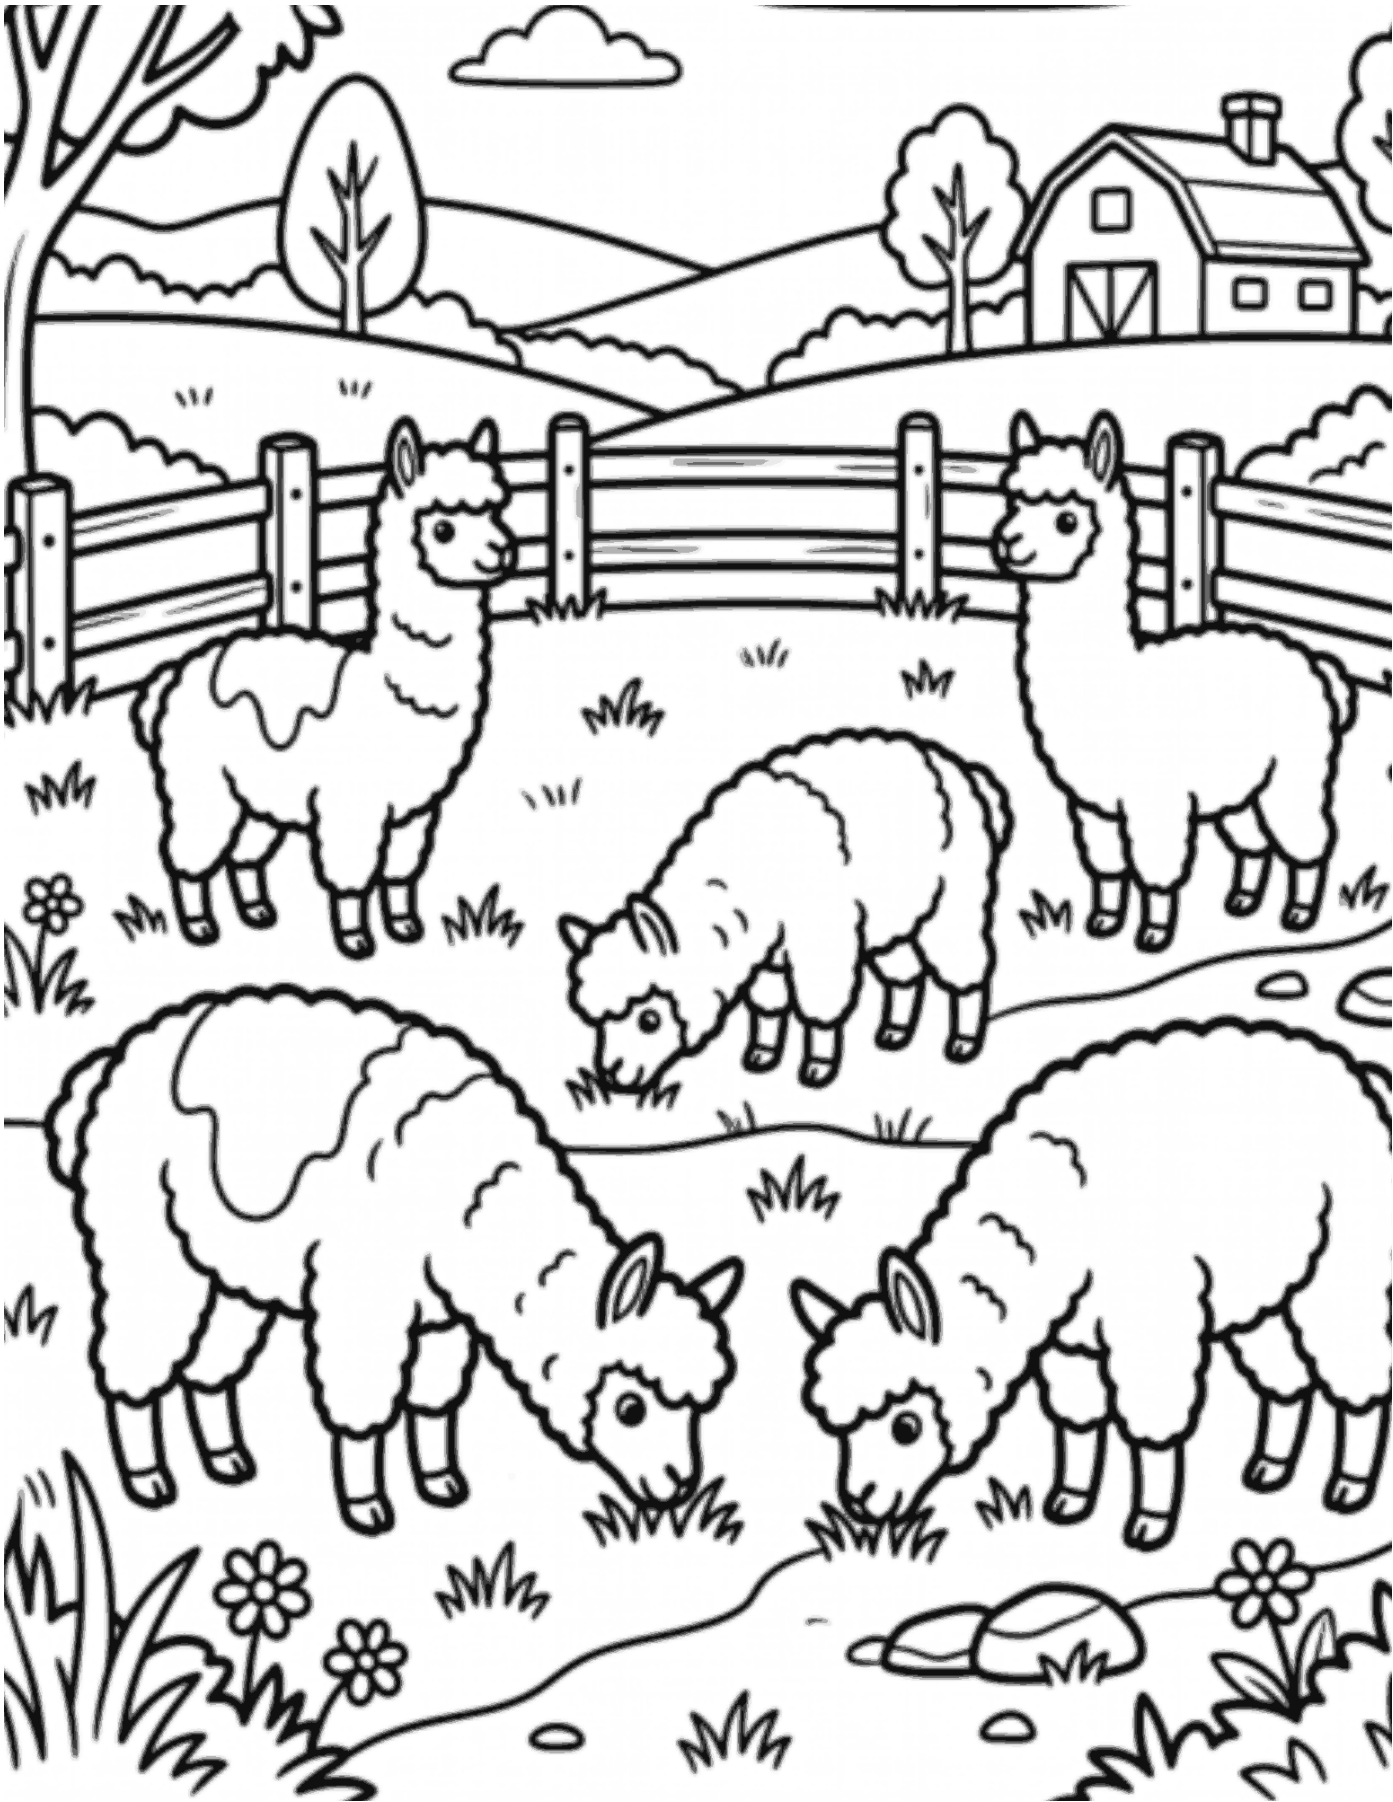

The most detailed sheet in the pack. Some kids come back to this one when they want something slow and quiet.
