Saksham sat quietly in his classroom.
Today, Mrs. Patel brought out colorful paints and thick paper.

"We will paint something that makes us happy," she said, smiling.
Saksham felt his heart flutter with excitement as he saw the bright colors and soft brushes lined up on the art table.

Saksham dipped his brush in blue paint and started to draw a big sky.

He watched Riya paint a garden full of pink and purple flowers.

Saksham worried his painting would not be as pretty.
Mrs. Patel leaned over and whispered, "Every picture is special if it's made by you."

Saksham took a deep breath and added green hills below his blue sky.

He painted a bright yellow sun and birds swooping high.

Riya peeked over and said, "That looks amazing! I love your birds."
Saksham felt a sparkle of pride in his chest.

When Mrs. Patel saw Saksham's painting, she hung it right in the center of the art wall.

"Your painting brings sunshine to our classroom," she exclaimed.

Saksham's face glowed. Riya clapped and giggled. Other classmates cheered for the bright, happy picture.

At the end of the day, Saksham walked home with a big smile.

He knew now that his art was unique because he made it with his own hands.

As he skipped along, Saksham imagined all the pictures he would paint next, feeling proud and excited for tomorrow.
