Under the Waves
R M Ballantyne

The spot where the wreck of the Seagull lay was a peaceful bay on the coast of Anglesey. The general look of the land was bleak: there were no trees, and few bushes. Indeed, the spire of a solitary little church on an adjoining hill was the most prominent object in the scene.

But, bleak though the land was, the immediate shore was at least a sight to behold. In one place, perpendicular cliffs descended sheer down into the depths of the water, decorated with an intricate lacework of foam. In a mass of boulders and shattered rocks stretched as if in defiance of the water. Elsewhere still, a yellow sand received the ripples with a kiss.

As I have said, the sea was calm, but a breeze had not beheld the turn of the air.

What can we deduce 'the Seagull' is?

A a boat
B a church
C a bay
D a bird
