Redy Rahadian

Redy Rahadian was born in Cianjur, West Java on May 17, 1973, and is a well-known Indonesian sculptor. He started his artistic career in 1997 after studying Mechanical Engineering at Institut Saint Joseph in Brussels, Belgium. His technical background later shaped the way he works with metal.

Redy is one of the youngest Indonesian sculptors whose artworks have been sold at Christie's and Sotheby's, making him one of the few Southeast Asian artists to reach this level early in his career. He is known for his free-hand, fully handmade welding technique. He does not use molds, which is uncommon among metal sculptors and gives his work a distinct and recognizable style.

His main materials are metals such as steel, iron, stainless steel, aluminum, and copper. His creative approach is based on understanding the character of each material and using it to build strong and expressive forms.

CHRISTIE'S Sotheby's

Indonesia's Maestro of Contemporary Steel Sculptor

Redy Rahadian is widely recognized for his mastery of welding, transforming industrial steel into expressive contemporary sculpture. With exceptional technical precision, he manipulates solid steel through cutting, bending, and welding to construct complex compositions that appear both powerful and fluid. Each joint, seam, and surface is carefully crafted by hand, reflecting years of disciplined practice and an intimate understanding of the material's structural and aesthetic potential.

Over the years, Redy Rahadian has established a strong presence in the international art world, with his works featured in prominent collections and appearing in global auction houses including Christie's and Sotheby's. Through a consistent commitment to craftsmanship and conceptual depth, he has positioned himself as one of Indonesia's notable contemporary steel sculptors, bridging the disciplines of metal fabrication and fine art with remarkable clarity and vision.
