Desy Gitary (June 26, 1980)

Desy Gitary is a self-taught Indonesian artist whose formal entry into the art world began in 2014, following a period of anatomical study under the Dutch painter Noella Ross in Bali. Her transition to a sustained artistic practice was a considered decision, prompted by a search for a life beyond the density and pace of Jakarta, and made possible through the resources accumulated during her previous professional career.

Gitary works principally in charcoal and paper, materials she regards with deliberate intention. Charcoal, which she describes as “the oldest drawing tool”, and the unadorned surface of paper, with its qualities of clarity, contrast, and fragility, function for the artist as both medium and mirror, registering an interior landscape that resists ornament. The economic precariousness of independent artistic life has shaped, rather than diminished, her commitment to a solitary mode of working.
