

Let's Break the Silence: Mental Health Matters in Administrative and Support Services

Did you know that 35.2 out of every 100,000 male workers in the administrative and support services industries die by suicide? That's more than the national average.

Those in administrative and support services are often feel expendable due to:

- Low pay, limited job security, and high turnover
- Repetitive, undervalued tasks with little recognition
- Lack of upward mobility or career development opportunities
- Isolation or detachment from core operations and decision-making
- Chronic stress and minimal support for mental health

It's time to recognize the invisible strain these workers carry.

Let's partner to build a workplace culture that values, supports, and uplifts everyone.
