Experience

In his practice, Tagore mediates cases that often involve multiple parties, strong emotions, and complex legal issues.

He has resolved disputes ranging from individual conflicts to cases involving thousands of claimants, with settlements reaching nine figures.

Tagore has resolved over a thousand sexual abuse claims across settings, including religious institutions, schools, prisons, and other organizations. In 2024, he resolved what is believed to be the largest aggregate sexual abuse settlement with the federal government in U.S. history.

Tagore has also mediated more than 200 class and representative PAGA wage-and-hour actions, covering industries from small businesses to large employers with workforces of up to 10,000 employees.

In addition, Tagore has mediated over 100 employment cases involving claims of harassment, retaliation, and discrimination.

Known for his pragmatic and resolution-oriented approach, Tagore was part of a select group of attorneys that served on the Los Angeles Superior Court’s Ad Hoc Wage and Hour Class Action Committee.

In this capacity, he worked with the Court as well as plaintiff and defense counsel to draft the LASC model settlement agreements for class actions and representative PAGA actions.

Tagore's extensive experience makes him uniquely positioned to credibly discuss with parties the strengths and weaknesses of their case.

Background

A first-generation Los Angeles native, Tagore is the son of Latin American and Indian immigrants. He grew up visiting his father on Hollywood and Bollywood sets, where he worked as a first assistant director. Immersed in the arts from an early age, Tagore launched his first business at 18, producing music videos and commercials.

On weekends, he played guitar in local bands and competed in chess tournaments. His early mix of creativity and analysis evolved into a mediation style that blends intuition with sharp problem-solving.

Tagore lives in Venice Beach with his wife, Leyla, and their labradoodle, Piper. Outside of his practice, he enjoys surfing, rock climbing, building furniture, and playing jazz guitar.
