

A beautiful park that used to hold so many precious memories was now destroyed. Luckily, I knew that nothing is impossible with shared action.

After a flood destroyed the park in my neighborhood, I spent hours learning about soil testing and checking which plants survived. I organized a group of volunteers to rebuild the park and revive our memories. This work helped me uncover my inner passion for environmental science to design systems that protect neighborhoods like mine from disasters.