

I explored my passion for mechanics early. One day, I noticed a few abandoned bikes behind my house. I instantly got interested in repairing them, watched manuals, and gradually restored them. Soon, friends and neighbors started turning in for help. It turned into a side hustle that taught me more than mechanics, but also resilience and accountability. Now, I use these skills both at work and in school. I want to continue learning mechanical engineering to turn my passion into a career.