

My junior year in school changed everything. Previously looking into a career in education, I accidentally explored an interest in information systems because of a... library. My school library reduced hours a few months before finals, right when everyone depended on it a lot. I created a student textbook exchange to solve the problem. It took a lot of organization, inventory tracking, and data processing. I'm determined to continue my studies in this field to design fair systems that make education accessible.