

When I worked in a local cultural center, I had to digitize and catalog old cassette recordings. The process required a lot of attention and focus. But it wasn't a challenge. Rather, an exciting journey into the stories of our ancestors. Handling the task, I realized that all these stories could've been lost if I hadn't digitized them. That's when I explored the importance of history. Now, I want to study this subject to prevent our ancestors' voices from fading.