

TRENDS

KITCHEN

Volume 26 No 02

$10.95

Trendsideas.com

$10.95US $13.95CAN

01>

0 74470 38112 9

Flow-on effect

Removing a wall and paring back the interior design has opened up this apartment, and created a seamless transition between the kitchen and living areas

Disappearing to the kitchen to prepare meals is a thing of the past for the owner of this refurbished apartment.

Architect David Hoffman redesigned the entire condo interior to provide a seamless flow between the kitchen and living areas, and a sleek, simple decor.

"The original apartment was very compartmentalized, with a closed-off kitchen. It also had a yellow living room, with heavy crown moldings, carpet and dark floors. The new owner wanted a very clean, simple interior."

Removing a wall between the original kitchen and dining area allowed the kitchen to become an integral part of the overall living space.

"We have taken the idea of integration seriously," Hoffman says. "By extending the kitchen millwork through to the living room and in the bathrooms, we have engaged the entire apartment. The millwork appears to grow and fold around corners, so that the whole space is unified."

Hoffman says providing similar white lacquered cabinets in all these areas also means the kitchen doesn't have to fit the confines of the original space – even though its position was determined by the existing building services. Removing these constraints means there is no obvious line where one space ends and another starts.

To further enhance the flow, the dining table was integrated into the kitchen cabinetry. A Z-shaped granite countertop steps down like a waterfall to form the dining table.

"This Calacatta quartzite

Facing page, top, and above: To integrate this new kitchen with the living space, a wall was removed. White lacquered cabinetry now extends beyond the wall of the kitchen, and wraps around the corner into the living room where it accommodates audiovisual equipment. The kitchen countertops and integral dining table feature white Calacatta quartzite granite.

Facing page, above: The sleek, simple furnishings are in a neutral palette.

Above: Architect David Hoffman specified low-iron backpainted glass for the backsplash. This takes on the colors of the changing light. Virtually all the kitchen storage is provided in large drawers, which feature recessed handpulls.

Right: The subdued colors create an ideal backdrop to the city view. A sculpture by Richard Hunt is mounted on a custom-designed pedestal that matches the millwork throughout the apartment.

granite is distinguished by its strong marbling," Hoffman says. "At first, I felt it might be too busy for the space, but the interior needs it. The sleek simplicity of the furniture is countered by the sense of movement provided by the pattern in the granite."

Because storage space is at a premium in the kitchen, most items, including pantry goods, are stored in long, ergonomic drawers. As with all the other cabinetry in the house, the drawers and doors have recessed handpulls to ensure a flush finish.

Where possible, appliances are integrated, including a 19-inch television, which sits on a pivoting extension arm.

"We have treated the TV like any another appliance," says the architect. "This ensures it is not obtrusive.

There is also a concealed 37-inch TV in the living room cabinetry, along with an integrated Fire Ribbon fireplace."

Other features include a concealed microwave drawer, and a low-iron backpainted glass backsplash, which reflects the changing light by day and night.

 See images and plan at TrendsIdeas.com/go/25827

Architect: David Hoffman AIA, Massey Hoffman Architects (Chicago, IL)

Interior designer: Lauren Coburn

Kitchen manufacturer: Ted Shultz, Hyland Design

Builder: WZ Home Improvement

Cabinetry: Semi-gloss opaque white-lacquer exteriors with maple interiors

Countertops: White Calacatta quartzite

Backsplash: Low-iron backpainted glass in Super White by Arcadia Glass

Flooring: Engineered prefinished maple from Eco Timber

Blinds: Phifer SheerWeave

Drapes: Pollack Through Thick and Thin

Lighting: 14 Standard pendant by Omer Arbel from Luminare

Fireplace: Fire Ribbon from Spark Modern Fires

Kitchen chairs: Luminare

Oven, cooktop and ventilation: GE Monogram

Microwave oven: Dacor

Refrigeration: Sub-Zero

Dishwasher: Bosch

Story by Colleen Hawkes
Photography by Eric Hausman