MAPAWAY 2026 explores mountains as more than landscapes. They shape how we shelter, move, cooperate, and imagine living together. From Berghut Halverwege, on the slopes of the Vaalsberg, artists, researchers, and makers come together to map the connections between people, place, and collective living.

Waste Mountain at Mt. Vaals

when FR 13/8
SU 23/8

info
This installation explores the making and unmaking of our own Waste Peak through the lens of other mountains: ecological restoration, artificial landforms, and the ethics of transforming what we call 'nature.' Can a waste mountain become a living ecosystem? Can a mountain be preserved or is it always in the process of disappearance?

Breaking Apart Together

when FR 13/8
SU 23/8

info
Stefan Schäfer uses speculative design to help humans and glaciers confront ecological loss together. Breaking Apart Together, a long-term research on the Hochvogel mountain on the border between Germany and Austria, positions mountains as collaborative partners, creating new rituals where nature participates meaningfully in our shared environmental grief.

Stains and Tears - Maps and Drawings

when FR 13/8
SU 23/8

info
This duo exhibition presents two complementary perspectives on mapping: collections of worn maps bearing traces of use in Vaals, paired with Marlies Vermeulen's meticulously crafted backside drawings in Eupen. Together, these works trace the lived stories of physical maps while prompting reflection on how those narratives translate—or disappear—in our increasingly digital mapping experience.

Verfluchtes Flies

when FR 13/8
SU 23/8

info
This 1m² piece belongs to Paulina Semkowicz's monumental painting Verfluchtes Flies, created on glacier fleece—the fabric used to shield alpine glaciers from melting. It depicts a vanishing mountain landscape rendered in natural materials, contrasting with the conventional petroleum-based alternatives. Cut from its original 100m² form, each fragment invites reflection on who owns our mountains and at what cost we attempt to save them.
